To the RIGHT HONOURABLE

T H O M A S,

Earl of Pembroke and Montgomery,

Baron Herbert of Cardiff, Baron Rofs of Kendal, Parr, Fitzhugh, Marmion, St. Quintin, and Herbert of Shurland; Knight of the Most Noble Order of the Garter, one of the Governours of the Charter-house; Fellow of the Royal Society; Lord Lieutenant of the County of Wilts; and one of His Majesty's Most Honourable Privy Council.

MOST NOBLE LORD,

E should not have presum'd to lay this humble Performance at your Feet, had not your Candour and Humanity been as remarkable, as is your familiar Acquaintance with all Kinds of polite Literature; you having also been the great Patron of whatsoever tends to the Improvement of good Letters and useful Knowledge.

YOUR Lordship's great Abilities, and unquestionable Integrity, have evidently appeared in that you have sustain'd

The D E D I C A T I O N.

sustain'd the most important Offices of the British State with universal Applause; and in which you have always behaved with that Moderation and Affability of Manners, which are so conspicuous through all Parts of your Life.

YOUR Lordship's superior Taste, in all the valuable Branches of Learning, is eminently apparent in that vast and curious Collection of the choicest Books, and rarest Pieces of Antiquity, with which you have not only stored your Library, but likewise enrich'd your Mind, with the Knowledge of the most abstruse Parts of solid Learning: But to enumerate every Thing that is great and good, which adorns you would be to give a History of all the Sciences, and a Detail of the whole System of Virtues.

IT was our Resolution to have said nothing, that look'd like Praise; but we found it impossible to enter upon such a pleasant Subject, as is your Lordship's Character, without observing some of its Beauties, tho' at the same Time we were not unapprehensive of Exciting your Lordship's Resentment, in Presuming to bestow any Encomiums on you, tho' never so just.

WE do not address this Work to your Lordship, as if we thought it were capable of being of any Service to yourself. It cannot be thought you can be unacquainted with the Meaning of Words and Terms of Arts, who are so conversant with the Arts themselves: But as you have always been a great Patron and Encourager of Learning; so we hope, that if this our Work has any Share of Merit, you will be pleased to honour it by a favourable Acceptance. And no longer to trespass upon your Lordship's Patience, we beg leave to offer our hearty Wishes, That you may long continue the great Ornament of the British Nation, and that to latest Posterity your Noble Family may continue to follow your great Example in the Paths of Virtue, and in the Service of their King and Country. And permit us to subscribe ourselves,

Your Lordship's Most Humble

And Devoted Servants,

GEORGE GORDON,
NAT. BAILEY.

ETYMOLOGICAL ENGLISH

DICTIONARY;

BEING ALSO

An Interpreter of Hard and Technical Words.

A

A a Roman Character, A a Italick, Æ a old English, Α a Greek, א Hebrew, are the first Letters of the Alphabet; and in all Languages, ancient and modern, the Character appropriated to the same Sound is the first Letter, except in the Abassine.

A [among the Ancients] was a numeral Letter, and signified 500.

A or ā, signifies 5000.

A [among the Romans] was used as an Abbreviation of the Word Abfolvo, i. e. I acquit. The Judges being wont to give their Sentence upon Persons, by casting Tables into a Box or Urn, on which Tables were the Letters A, C or N L. If they acquitted the Person try'd, they cast into the Urn a Table with the Letter A marked on it; if they condemned, with the Letter C, for Condemno, i. e. I condemn; if the Matter was hard to be determined, with the Letters N L, for Non liquet, i. e. It does not appear plain. Hence Cicero calls the Letter A Litera salutaris, i. e. the saving Letter. A was also used by the Romans, as the first of the Litteræ Nundinales, in Imitation of which, the Dominical Letters were introduced; and A is also used as the first of the Dominical Letters in our Julian Calendar.

A α Αλφα, and Ω or ω Ωμέγα, i. e. great O [Hieroglyphically] being the first and last Letters of the Greek Alphabet, are used in the Revelation of St. John, to signify the first and the last.

A [as an Abbreviation] is used for Anno in the Year, and Artium of Arts, as Anno Domini, in the Year of our Lord, Anno Mundi, in the Year of the World, A B, Artium Baccalaureus, Batchelor of Arts.

A or A A [with Physicians] is used in Prescriptions for Ans, and denotes an equal Portion of divers Ingredients, either in respect of Weight or Measure; also A or AA. Æ. P. denotes simply equal Parts of the Ingredients therein mentioned.

AAA [with Chymists] is sometimes used to signify Amalgama or Amalgamation.

A B

A B, at the Beginning of English Saxon Names, is generally a Contraction of Abbot, i. e. an Abbot or Abby; so that as to the Names of Places, it may be generally concluded, that the Place belonged to a Monastery elsewhere, or that there was one there.

A BACOT [Incert. Etym.] a Royal Cap of State made in the shape of two Crowns, anciently worn by the Kings of England.

ABA'CTORS [Abactores, L.] those who drive away or steal Cattle in Herds, or great Numbers at once, in Distinction from those that steal only a Sheep or two.

A'BACUS [Αβακ, Gen. of Αβαξ, Gr. which some derive from על, Heb. to be elevated or raised, and thence take it to signify a high Shelf, &c.] it was used among the Ancients for a Cupboard or Buffet.

ABACUS [Αβακ, Gr.] a Counting-Table anciently used in Calculations: This was sometimes a Board cover'd with Sand, Dust, &c. sifted evenly upon it, on which Geometricians, &c. used to draw their Schemes.

ABACUS Pythagoricus [i. e. Pythagoras's Table] a Table of Numbers contrived for the more easy learning the Principles of Arithmetick, and supposed to be the Multiplication Table, and thence it has been used to signify an Alphabet or A B C.

ABACUS [in Architecture] is the uppermost Member or Capital of a Column, which serves as a Sort of Crowning both to the Capital and Column, tho' some erroneously make it to be the Capital itself.

The ABACUS [according to Vitruvius] was originally designed to represent a square Tile laid over an Urn or Basket. The Original or Rise of this first regular Order of Architecture is said to be as follows. An old Woman of Athens having placed a Basket covered with a Tile over the Root of an Acanthus [Bear's Foot] the Plant shooting forth the following Spring, encompassed the Basket all round, till having met the Tile, it curled back in a kind of Scrolls, which being observ'd by an ingenious Sculptor, he formed a Capital upon this Plan; representing the Tile by the Abacus, the Basket by the Vase or Body of the Capital, and the Leaves by the Volutes.

The ABACUS is something different in different Orders. It is a flat square Member in the Tuscan, Dorick, and ancient Ionick Orders. In the richer Orders, the Corinthian and Composit it loses its native Form; having its four Sides or Faces arch'd or cut inward, with some Ornament as a Rose, some other Flower, a Fish's Tail, &c.

But there are other Liberties taken in the Abacus, by several Architects. Some make it a perfect Ogee in the Ionick, and crown it with a Filler. In the Dorick, some place a Cymatium over it, and so do not make it the uppermost Member; In the Tuscan Order, where it is the largest and most massive, and takes up one-third Part of the whole Capital; they sometimes call it the Die of the Capital, and Scamozzi uses the Name Abacus, for a Concave moulding in the Capital of the Tuscan Pedestal.

B

ABA B

ABA'DDIR, a Name given to the Stone, that Saturn is fabled to have swallow'd instead of his Son Jupiter: For the Poets feign, that Saturn, having been forewarned, that he should be expelled his Kingdom by one of his Sons, to prevent it, as soon as ever his Wife Rhea was deliver'd of a Male Child, sent for it in order to devour it; but having served his Wife so once, she afterwards instead of the Child sent him a Stone, wrapped up in swaddling Cloaths, and so deceived him, and preserved the Child. ACCIDENT [Accidens, L.] A Casualty or Chance; or a contingent Effect, or something produced casually and without any Fore-knowledge or Destination of it in the Agent that produced it, or to whom it happens.

ACCIDENT [with Logicians] is taken in a three-fold Sense.

1. In Opposition to the Essence of a Thing, for whatever does not really belong to a Thing, but only casually; as the Clothes a Person wears, the Money in his Pocket, &c.

2. Many Qualities are termed Accidents, in Contradistinction to the essential Properties of any Subject; because they are there not essentially, but accidentally. This the Schoolmen call accidens predicabile, and it implies a common Quality, which may or may not be in any Subject; as Whiteness in a Wall, &c.

3. A Thing is called an ACCIDENT in Opposition to Substance, when it is in its Essence or Nature to subsist in, inhere, or cleave to some Substance, and cannot be alone. This they also call accidens predicamentale, and in this Sense the last nine Predicaments are called Accidents or it is thus with all Qualities whatsoever.

A Thing is also frequently stiled an Accident, in Reference to its Cause, or at least as to our Knowledge of it, and by this an Effect either casually produced, or which appears to have been so to us, is commonly understood.

Common ACCIDENTS [with Logicians] is the fifth of the universal Ideas, and are when the Object is a true Mode, which may be separated at least by the Mind, from the Thing of which it is said to be an Accident, and yet the Idea of that Thing shall not be destroyed; as round, hard, just, prudent, &c.

Entitive ACCIDENTS [in Metaphysics] are either primary or secondary.

A'ER [Aἴρ, Gr.] Air, one of the 4 Elements.

Æ'RA is said originally to have signified a Number stamp'd on Money, to denote the current Value of it; and if so, it may come from Æs Brass, from which Plural Æra came the feminine singular Æra, and that because they put the Word Æra to each Particular of an Account, as we now do Item, or else because the Romans anciently marked down the Number of Years in Tables with little Brass Nails; and so in Reference to the last mentioned Custom the Word Æra came to signify the same with Epocha, viz. a certain Time or Date from whence to begin the new Year; or some particular Way of reckoning Time and Years.

And in this Sense the Word is thought to be composed of these initial Letters A. E. R. A. for Annus erat regni Augusti, the Spaniards having began their Æra from his Reign.

Reign. There are many Æra's used by Chronologers, the most eminent of which are

1. The Æra of the Creation of the World, which began, according to the Julian Account, on the twenty fourth Day of the Month of October, which some place 3951 Years before the Birth of Christ, others reckon 3983, and Kepler 3993.

The Christian Æra, from the Birth of Christ, begins December 25.

The Roman Æra, from the Building of the City of Rome, begins April 21, and is 752 Years before Christ's Time.

The Turkish Æra or Hegira, which they account from Mahomet's Flight, begins the 16th of July, A.D. 622.

The Æra of the Olympiads begins from the New Moon in the Summer Solstice 777 Years before the Birth of Christ. This Æra and that of Iphitus is chiefly used by Greek Historians.

ÆSCULAPIUS [Ἀσκληπιός of α privative, and τῷ οὐλάσθωαι, because he suffers not to die] the Poets make him the Son of Apollo by the Nymph Coronis, whom Apollo kill'd with an Arrow while she was big with Child, because she had admitted another to her Bed, but preserv'd the Child by cutting it out of her Womb, and afterwards 'twas suckled by a Goat.

Others say, that Æsculapius was a poor Infant, whom his cruel Parents being aham'd to own, laid in a Wood near Epidaurus, and was fortunately found by some Huntsmen, who observing a lambent Flame about its Head, they accounting it a Prognostick that the Child would prove in Time an eminent Person, put him to Nurse to a Woman named Trigo. Being grown up, he studied Physick under Chiron the Centaur, and proved so great a Proficient in the Art, that he obtained the Stile of the God of Physick.

He had a Temple built to him in a City of the Romans named Tetrapolis, which was enrich'd with noble Presents, offered by Persons, who ascrib'd their Recovery out of dangerous Sicknesses to Æsculapius. And the Walls of this Temple were hung, and in a Manner hid, with Memorials of Miracles done by him.

The Grecians celebrated Plays to him every five Years, nine Days after the Isthmean Games in the Woods near the City Epidaurus. Æsculapius was worshipped under the Form of a Serpent by the Romans, who, when the City of Rome was grievously afflicted with the Plague, sent Ambassadors to Epidaurus to fetch the God Æsculapius to their Assistance, and they say the Serpent that was worshipped there for Æsculapius, follow'd the Ambassadors of its own Accord to the Ship that carried it to Rome. The Romans built a Temple for it in the Isle call'd Tiberina. Sick People us'd to lye in this Temple for Recovery of their Health, and oftentimes, when they found themselves no better, revild Æsculapius.

To Æsculapius were dedicated the Serpent, the Goat, the Raven, the Dog and the Dragon.

The Ancients painted him in the Form of an old Man with a long Beard, having on his Head a Crown made of the Branch of a Bay-tree, and in his Hand a Staff full of Knots, about which a Serpent twisted itself, and at his Feet was either a Dog or an Owl.

These Things were design'd as Hieroglyphicks of the Qualities of a good Physician, intimating that he ought to be as cunning as a Serpent, as vigilant as a Dog, as experienc'd as a Person of great Age, to be capable of managing a Concern so difficult as Physick is.

It is reported that Dionysius the Sicilian Tyrant coming into a Temple, where the Statues of Apollo and Æsculapius were standing together, Æsculapius having a grave Beard of Massy Gold, he took away the Beard, colouring his Sacrilege by putting a Jest upon Æsculapius, saying, it was not just that he should have a Beard, when Apollo his Father had none.

Æ'THER [ἄϊθρ of αἶ ἰένω, I run always, or of αἶθρ shining bright, or of αἶ ἰέρω, always warming, Gr. or of אֵתֶר, Heb. illustrious] is most commonly used to signify a very fine, thin, diaphanous, Fluid, which, as some suppose, surrounds the Earth up to as far as the Interstellar World, and which easily penetrates and runs through all Things, and permits all Things to run as easily through it. Dr. Hook calls that Medium or Fluid Body, in which all other Bodies do as it were swim and move, Æther. But this some disapprove of, as favouring too much of the Cartesian Doctrine of an absolute Plenum, which has been proved an Impossibility by many infallible Reasons and Experiments. Therefore as we call the Medium, in which we breathe and live, the Air, by which we mean an elastic, fluid Body, which either has very large Interstices devoid of all Matter, or else is in Part fill'd with a Fluid, very easily moving out of them by Compression, and returning as readily into them again when that Compression is taken off; so we also do agree to call that finer Fluid Æther (if it be a Body) which is extended round our Air and Atmosphere, above it and beyond it up to the Planets, or to an indefinite Distance, tho' we scarce well understand what we mean by the Word Æther.

ÆTHE'REAL [æthereus, L.] pertaining to or of the Quality of Æther.

ÆTHEREAL Matter [with Naturalists] a very fine, thin, transparent Fluid, which (as some imagine) surrounds the Earth up as far as the Firmament of fixed Stars; which easily pierces and runs through all Things, and permits all Things as easily to run through it.

Infancy or Childhood, extends from the Birth to the fourteenth Year.

Youth, or the Age of Puberty commences at fourteen, and ends at about twenty-five.

Manhood, terminates at fifty.

Old Age commences from fifty, and extends till the Time of Death.

AGE [in Law] is used to signify those special Times which enable Men and Women to do that, which they could not do before, being supposed to want Judgment. Thus a Man may take an Oath of Allegiance at twelve Years of Age, and is at Age of Discretion at fourteen, and at full Age at twenty-one.

AGE Prier [Common Law] is when an Action is brought against one that is under Age for Lands coming to him by Descent, who may then move the Court, and pray that the Action may be staid till he is of full Age, which is most commonly allowed; but in the Civil Law it is otherwise, for that obliges them to answer by their Tutors or Guardians.

Old AGE [Hieroglyphically] was represented by a Raven, because that Bird lives a great while, and therefore to represent a Man dead in a very Old Age, the Egyptians painted a dead Raven.

AGES [of the World] are certain Periods or Limits of Time, which for the Convenience of Chronology and History are distinguished, by those Accidents and Revolutions that have happened in the World; the Generality of Chronologers agree in making seven Ages or Periods.

I. From the Creation of the World to Noah's Flood which contains 1656 Years.

II. From Noah's Flood to the Birth of Abraham, which contains 382 Years.

III. From Abraham's Birth to the Departure of Moses and the Children of Israel out of Egypt which contains 550 Years.

IV. From the Israelites going out of Egypt to the Building of Solomon's Temple, which contains 479 Years.

V. From the laying the Foundation of the Temple to the Reign of Cyrus in Babylon, which contains 493 Years.

VI. From the Reign of Cyrus to the Coming of Christ, which contains 538 Years.

VII. From the Birth of Christ to the present Year 1730, the whole from the Creation of the World, to this Year 1731, makes 5783 Years.

The Chronologers do pretty generally agree, as to the dividing the Time from the Creation into seven Periods or Ages, yet they differ as to the Time contained in these Periods: so that Chevreau in his History of the World reckons more than thirty different Opinions.

Again, the Poets distinguish the Age of the World into four Periods: the Golden, the Silver, the Brazen, and the Iron Age; the Golden Age, was in the Reign of Saturn; the Silver, that of the Beginning of Jupiter; the Brazen Age, was when Men began to depart from their Primitive Simplicity and Honesty, and to fall to Injustice and Rapine; and the Iron Age, when they grew not only covetous and unjust, but added Cruelty, Savageness, and Barbarities to their Vices.

It is not improbable, but that this Notion of the four Ages was taken from the History of the Golden Image, seen by Nebuchadnezzar in a Dream, mentioned in Daniel, by which the first Monarchy was denoted the Golden one, the second Silver, the third Brazen, and the fourth Iron, and that the Greeks, who of a long Time had Commerce with the Egyptians, had it from them.

AIR [Aer, L. of ἄρ Gr. of τὸ αἶρ ἴαν, because it is always flowing, or as others from ἄνι to breathe, or as others say of אֵר Heb. Light] is generally understood to be that Fluid in which we breathe and the Earth is enclosed, and as it were wrapped up.

AIR is found to have these Six Properties following.

1. It is liquid, and cannot be congeal'd like Water.
2. It is much lighter than Water, but yet it is not without its Gravity.
3. It is diaphanous, that is, it transmits the Light.
4. It can easily be condens'd and rarified.
5. It has an elastick Force.
6. It is necessary for Flame and Respiration.

I. It is much more liquid than Water is, and cannot be congeal'd, and that for the Reasons following.

1. Because it seems to have Pores much larger, full of finer Matter, of a very quick Motion, whereby the Particles of Air are continually driven about, as it appears by this Experiment, that if Air be pent up in a Vessel it is easily condensed; whereas no Person yet, by any Invention, has been able to condense Water.

2. The Particles of Air are very fine and branched, so that they leave Interstices between one another, and can never be formed into a compact Body.

II. Water has been prov'd by Experiment to be 840 Times heavier than Air, from whence it will follow, that a certain Bulk of Air contains in it 840 times less homogeneous Matter than an equal Bulk of Water does; and this is the Reason why Air may be condens'd, but not Water.

III. The Air is Diaphanous, because having very wide Pores, and separable Parts, it admits the Matter whereof Light consists through right Lines. And hence it is, that not only the Sun and the Planets shine or reflect their Light upon us, but also the fixt Stars are seen by us at an immense Distance. But as deep Water does not transmit all the Rays which fall upon it, because the Series of Light is interrupted by the Motion of the watery Particles: So many of the Rays, which fall upon this prodigious Bulk of Air over us, must needs be broken off and intercepted before they reach us; which probably may be the Cause, that where the Sky is very clear, it is not quite transparent, but appears of a more blue and waterish Colour.

IV. AIR is condensed and rarified, because it consisting of branchy Particles, those Particles are easily scatter'd by an extraordinary quick Motion, which is called Rarification.

Again, they are easily thrust into a less Compass, while their Branches are driven together, and close one with another, and thereby crush out the liquid Matter which lay between them; and this is called Condensation.

There are a Multitude of Experiments to prove this; as there are a sort of Guns, into which such a Quantity of Air may be forc'd, as to shoot out a Leaden Bullet with great Violence.

V. That the Air has an Elastick Force; that is, that it has a Power to return to the same State, and re-occupy the same Space which it filled before, when ever the Force that crush'd it into a narrower Compass is removed, the beforementioned Experiment does demonstrate.

VI. That AIR is necessary for Flame or Respiration. Without Air, Flame and Fire go out, and Air seems to have a nitrous or sulphurous Matter in it, that the Air which lies upon so many Plants, Animals and Minerals, upon which the Heat of the Sun continually operates and extracts a good Part of them, must needs carry away with it innumerable Particles of Sulphur and volatile Salts, wherewith Things abound, as chymical Experiments demonstrate.

AIR [in Chymical Writers] is expressed by one of these Characters.

AIR [in Horsemanship] is a Cadence and Liberty of Motion, that is accommodated to the natural Disposition of a Horse, that makes him work in the Manage, and rise with Obedience, Measure and Justness of Time. Others use the Word Air in a strict Sense, to signify a Manage that's higher, slower and more artfully designed than the terra a terra. The Walk, Trot and Gallop are not in the general accounted Airs; others again use the Word Air, for the Motion of a Horse's Legs upon a Gallop.

AIRINESS [of Air] Briskness, Liveliness.

A'LGEBRA [it is deriv'd of al excellent, and Gebra the Name of its supposed Inventor] it is the Science of Quantity in general, or a peculiar Method of Reasoning, which takes the Quantity sought, as if it were known, and then by the Helps of another or more Quantities given, proceeds by undeniable Consequences, till at length the Quantity first only supposed to be known, is found to be equal to some Quantity or Quantities certainly known; and it is two-fold, either numeral or literal: It is called the Analytical Art.

Numeral ALGEBRA { serves to resolve Arithmetical
Vulgar ALGEBRA { Questions, it is so called because the Quantity unknown and sought for, is represented by some Letter of the Alphabet, or some other Character taken at Pleasure; but all the Quantities given are expressed by Numbers, called the Old Algebra.

Literal ALGEBRA { is a Method by which both the Specious ALGEBRA { Quantities given or unknown, and those unknown are severally expressed by Letters of the Alphabet; and this is useful generally in the solving Mathematical Problems, and is called the New Algebra.

ALGEBRAICAL, of or pertaining to Algebra.

ALGEBRAICAL Curve [in Geometry] is a Curve of such a Nature, that the Abscisses of it will always bear the same Proportion to their respective Ordinates; thus if the Product of any Abscissa, A. P. x. multiplied into the same Quantity, p. be always equal to the Square of the Correspondent Ordinate, P. M. 2. yy.

ALGEBRA'IST, a Person skilled in the Art of Algebra.

A'LGEMA [Ἀλγίμα, Gr.] Pain, Sickness.

A'LGENE [with Astronomers] a fixt Star of the second Magnitude in the right Side of Perseus, in Longitude 57 Degrees 17 Minutes, Latitude 30 Degrees 5 Minutes.

A'LGID [algidus, L.] Cold, Chill.

ALGI'DITY { [algiditas, L.] Coldness, Chilness.
A'LGIDNESS {

ALGI'FICK [algificus, L.] making chilly, &c.

A'GOL [in Astronomy] a fixed Star of the first Magnitude in the Constellation Perseus, in Longitude 51 Degrees, 37 Minutes, Latitude 22 Degrees 22 Minutes, called also Medusa's Head.

A'LGOR, great Cold or Chilness.

A'LGORISM [with Mathematicians] the practical Operations in the several Parts of specious Arithmetick; also the Practice of common Arithmetick, by ten Numerical Figures.

A'LGORITHM [with Mathematicians] the Art of Reckoning or Computing by Numbers, and contains the five principal Parts of Arithmetick, viz. Numeration, Addition, Subtraction, Multiplication and Division; the same is called Logistica Numeralis.

ALGO'SE [algosus, L.] full of Weeds or Rees called Alga.

ALGUAZIL, a Serjeant or Officer in Spain, who arrests Persons, and executes the Orders of the Magistrate.

ALHOLLAND-TIDE [is a Corruption of Albaltows-tide or Time, q. d. the Tide or Time of all holy Men] the first Day of November, called All-Saints-day.

ALHIDA DA [with Astronomers] the Index or Ruler that moves upon the Center of an Astrolabe Quadrant, or other Mathematical Instrument, Arab.

ALHA'NDAL [in Pharmacy] the Arabian Name of Colocynthis, as Trochisca Albandali, are Trochees composed of Colocynthis, Bdellium and Gum Tragacanth.

A'LIAS, a second or further Writ issued from the Courts at Westminster, after a Capias issued out without Effect.

ALIAS, Dist. is to ascertain the Name and Additions of the Defendant in Declarations for Debt on Bond, &c.

ANAPHORA [with ancient Astronomers] an Ascension or Rising up of the twelve Signs of the Zodiack, from the East, by the daily Course of the Heavens.

ANAPLEROSIS [ἀναπλήρωσις, of ἀναπληρω to fill up, Gr.] a filling up or supplying.

ANAPLEROSIS [with Surgeons] that Part of Surgery that restores either what Nature has deny'd, or is any other Way decay'd.

ANAPLEROTICALNESS [of ἀναπλήρωσις, Gr.] the being of Quality to fill up.

ANAPLEROTICKS [ἀναπληρωτικά, Gr.] Medicines proper to fill up Ulcers and Wounds with new Flesh.

ANARCHY [ἀναρχία, of ἀνα without, and ἀρχή a Chief or Head] being without Rule, Want of all Government in a State or Nation, there being no supream Governor; so that all Affairs thereof are in Disorder and Confusion.

ANARE'TA [probably of ἀναίρεω, Gr. to destroy] a Killer or Murderer.

ANARETA [in Astrology] the fatal Planet, the Threatener of Death in a Nativity.

ANARRH'NON [of ἀνὰ and ῥή the Nostril, Gr.] an Herb like Pimpernel, Calves-Snout.

ANASA'RCIA [ἀνασάρκεια, of ἀνα and σάρξ Flesh, Gr.] a certain sort of Dropsy, being a white, soft, yielding Swelling of some Parts or of the whole Body, that dents in when pressed.

ANASTASIS [ἀνάστασις, Gr.] a Stretching or Reaching.

ANASTASIS [in Surgery] the stretching out of the Body towards the upper Part.

ANASTOMA'TICKS [of ἀναστόμωσις, of ἀνα and στόμα, Gr. the Mouth, or ἀναστόμω I open or unstop] Medicines that open and widen the Orifices of the Vessels, so as to cause the Blood to circulate freely, and pass easily out of the Arteries into the Veins. Or Medicines for the Opening of the Pores and Passages, as those Medicines are that provoke Sweat, Urine, &c.

ANASTOECHIO'SIS [ἀναστοιχείωσις, Gr.] a Resolution of mixt Bodies into their first Principles by Chymical Operations.

ANASTO'MOSIS [ἀναστόμωσις, Gr.] a Loosening or Opening, such an Aperture in the Vessels as lets out their Contents, also a mutual Opening of Arteries and Veins one into another, L.

ANASTOMO'SIS [with Physicians] a Flux or Flowing out of the natural Humours of a human Body, &c. as Blood, Chyle, Lympha, at the Places where are such Vessels as are not well closed.

ANASTRO'PHE [ἀναστροφή, Gr.] a turning the contrary Way or Inversion, the contrary Way.

ANASTROPHE [with Grammarians] a Figure when that Word which should follow is set foremost, as Italianum contra.

ANA'TASIS [ἀνάτασις, Gr.] a stretching, reaching our Extension upwards.

ANATASIS [with Surgeons] an Extension of the Body towards the upper Parts.

ANA'THEMA [Ἀνάθεμα of ἀνατίθεμαι, Gr.] the last Syllable but one short, is a solemn Curse or Sentence of Excommunication; also any Person, &c. cut off from the Communion of the Church.

ANATHE'MA [Ἀνάθημα, of ἀνατίθεμι, Gr.] the last Syllable but one long, is used for any kind of Gift or Offering, given or set apart to God or the Church. Things that were by the Pagans consecrated to mere Idols, were commonly hung upon the Walls, &c. of their Temples.

ANATHEMA'TICALLY [of anatheme, F. anathema, L. Ἀνάθεμα, Gr.] in a cursing manner.

TO ANATHE'MATIZE [anathematizare, L.] to put under a Curse, to excommunicate.

ANATHYMIA'SIS [of ἀνα and θυμιάμα, Gr.] a Perfume, Vapour or Exhalation.

ANA'TOCISM [ἀνατοκισμός, of ἀνα and τίτω, Gr. to bring forth] Compound Interest, or Use upon Use, the renewing Use-Money annually, so that the Interest becomes the Principal; Interest upon Interest; Compound Interest.

ANATO'MICAL [of ἀνατομικός, Gr.] pertaining to Anatomy.

ANATO'MICALLY [anatomicè, L. of ἀνατομικός, Gr.] according to the Rules of Anatomy.

TO ANA'TOMIZE [of ἀνατέμνω, Gr.] to cut up, to cut to Pieces, or dissect an human Body, in order to view the Parts of it.

ANA'TOMIST, a Person well vers'd or skill'd in Anatomy.

ANA'TOMY [ἀνατομή, Gr.] a curious, dexterous and neat Dissection, or taking to Pieces the solid Parts of an animal Body, for the Discovery of its several Parts, in order to explain the Original, Nature and Use, for the better Improvement of Physick and Natural Philosophy.

ANATRIPSIS [of ἀνα and τριβω to wear, &c.] a rubbing against or upon, a bruising.

ANATRIPSIS [in Surgery] the bruising or breaking of a Bone, the breaking the Stone in the Kidneys or Bladder.

A'NATRON [ἀνατρον, Gr.] a sort of Salt extracted from the Water of the River Nile; also a nitrous Juice which condenses in Vaults, Arches, and subterraneous Places; also a volatile Salt skimmed off the Composition of Glass when in Fusion; also a compound Salt made of Quicksilver, Alum, Vitriol, Common Salt and Nitre.

ANAXY'RIS [ἀναξυρίς, Gr.] the Herb-Sorrel.

A'NBURY [with Farriers] a sort of Wen or spongy Wart full of Blood, growing in any Part of the Body of an Horse.

A'NCESTOR, a Forefather, L.

ANCESTOR [in Common Law] the Difference between Ancestor and Predecessor is this, Ancestor is apply'd to a natural Person as, A B, and his Ancestors, and Predecessor may be used of any Persons that were prior in Time, as to a Corporation or Body Politick, as a Bishop and his Predecessor.

ANCE'STREL [in Law] pertaining to Ancestors, as Homage Ancestrel, i. e. Homage done by Ancestors.

A'NCHOR [anchora, L. of ἄγκυρα, Gr. ancpe, Sax.] an Iron Instrument to hold a Ship in the Place she rides.

ANCHOR [Hieroglyphically] represents Hope, Hope being as it were the Anchor that holds us firm to our Faith in Adversity.

To Boat the ANCHOR, to put it into the Boat.

The ANCHOR is foul [Sea Phrase] is when the Cable by the turning of the Ship is hitcht about the Fluke.

The ANCHOR is a Cock-bell [Sea Phrase] used when the Anchor hangs right up and down by the Ship's Side.

The ANCHOR is a Peek [Sea Phrase] is when it is just under the House or Hole in the Ship's Stern, thro' which the Cable runs out that belongs to it.

To boot an ANCHOR [Sea Term] is to take or put it into the Boot.

To let fall an ANCHOR } [Sea Phrase] is to put or let
To drop an ANCHOR } it down into the Sea, in order to make the Ship ride.

The ANCHOR comes Home [Sea Term] used, when it cannot hold the Ship, but that it drives away by the Violence of the Wind or Tide.

To fetch Home the ANCHOR } [Sea Term] is to weigh
To bring Home the ANCHOR } or take it up out of the River, &c.

To fix an ANCHOR [Sea Term] is to caſe the Flook of it with Boards, that it may better take hold in ſoft Ground.

A'NCHORAGE } Ground apt or fit to hold the Anchor A'NCHORING } of a Ship, ſo that ſhe cannot drive, but ride it out with Safety.

A'NCHORAGE [in Law] a Duty paid to the King for the Privilege of caſting Anchor in a Pool of a Haven.

ANCHORA'LIS Proceſſus [with Anatomists] the Proceſs or ſhooting forth of the Shoulder Bones like a Beak call'd Coracoides and Cornicularis.

A'NCHORED [in Heraldry] as a Croſs anchored is ſo called, becauſe the four Extremities of it reſemble the Flook of an Anchor.

A'NCHORET } an Hermit, &c. who leads A'NCHORITE } a ſolitary Life in a Deſart, to be farther out of the Reach of the Temptations of the World, and to be more at Leiſure for Meditation.

ANCHO'VIES [of anchoia, Ital. or anchora, Span.] a ſmall Fiſh caught on the Coaſt of Catalonia, &c. which comes to us in Pickle, uſed in Sauces.

ANCHU'SA [ἀγχύσα, Gr.] a kind of Bugloſs or Orchanet.

ANCHY'LE [ἀνχύλη, Gr.] the Back Part of the Knee; alſo the Contraſtion of a Joint, eſpecially of the Ham.

A'NCHYLOPS [ἀνχυλωψ, Gr.] a certain Swelling between the great Corner of the Eye and the Noſe, a Species or rather Degree of the Fiftula lacrymalis.

A'NCIENT } old, of former time, and particularly as A'NTIENT } oppoſed to late or modern.

ANCIENT Demeſn [in Law] a Tenure whereby all Manours appertaining to the Crown were held in the Times of King Edward the Confefſor, and William the Conqueror.

A'NCIENT } a Flag or Streamer ſet up in the Stern of A'NSHENT } a Ship.

A'NCIENTLY [anciennement, F.] in ancient Times.

A'NCIENTNESS [ancienneté, F.] the Oldneſs.

A'NCIENTS [in the Middle Temple] ſuch as are paſt their Reading, and do not read.

ANCIENTS [in Gray's Inn] the Society conſiſts of Anients, Barriſters, Benchers, and Students under the Bar.

A'NCIENTY [in Law] Ancientneſs, Seniority, Elderſhip.

A'NCOME [with Surgeons] a ſort of Boil, Sore, foul Ulcer, or Swelling, that breaks out in the fleſhy Parts.

A'NCON [ἀγκων, Gr.] the Elbow, the Top or Point of the Elbow.

A'NCON [in Anatomy] the backward and larger ſhooting forth the Bone of the Arm call'd Ulna.

A'NCONES [with Architects] the Coins or Corners of Walls; ſuch as Meetings or Bowing of Elbows; Croſs Beams, Rafters.

ANCONÆ'US Musculus [Anatomy] the ſixth Muſcle of the Elbow, ariſing from the lower and back Part of the Os humeri, and is inſerted to the lateral Part of the Brachæus externus, a little below the Olecranium; it helps to ſtretch the Elbow.

A'NCONY [in the Iron Mines] is when Metal is wrought in the finery-Forge, from a four-square Maſs or Bloom to a Bar of any Shape about three Foot in Length, leaving a ſquare rough Piece at each End to be wrought at the Chaſery.

ANCY'LE [ἀνχύλη, Gr.] a ſort of Dart or Javelin.

ANCYLE [with Anatomists] the bending either of the Elbow or the Hand; alſo the Contraſtion or drawing together of a Joint.

ANCYLOBLE'PHARUM [ἀγχυλοβλέφαρον, of ἀγκύλη, crooked, and βλέφαρον an Eye-lid, Gr.] a Diſeaſe when the Eye-lids grow to the Tunica Cornea, or Albuginea, ſo that they cloſe and ſtick together.

ANCYLOGLO'SSUM [ἀγχυλόλωσσον, of ἀγκύλη and γλῶσσα, Gr. the Tongue] a being Tongue-ty'd, when the ſmall String which is under the Tongue is too ſtrait, which cauſes it to be difficult to utter Words.

ANCYLO'GLOSSUS [ἀγχυλόγλωσσος, Gr.] one who has an Impediment in his Speech, Tongue ty'd, &c.

ANCYLO'MELE [ἀγκύλος crooked, and μέλη a Probe, Gr.] a crooked Probe.

ANCY'LOSIS, the ſame as Ancylogloſſum.

ANCYLO'TOMUS [of ἀγκύλη and τομή, Gr.] a ſmall Knife to cut the String under the Tongue.

ANCYROIDES [ἀγκυροειδής, of ἀγκυρα an Anchor, and ἄσος Form, Gr.] the Shooting forth or Proceſs of the Shoulder Bone, reſembling a Beak.

ANDABA'TÆ [among the Ancients] a ſort of Gladiators who fought Hood-wink'd.

ANDR'NA, a Swathe in mowing; alſo as much Ground as a Man could ſtride over at once.

ANDOVILLE [in French Cookery] a ſort of Chitterlings, either of Calves or Hog's Guts, the one ſtuff'd with Pork, and the other with Udder, Calves Chaldron, &c.

ANDOVILLE'T [French Cookery] Minc'd Veal, Bacon, and other Ingredients roll'd into a Paſte, or of Eels and Carps Fleſh minced and pounded.

ANDRA'CHNE [ἀνδράχνη, Gr.] Purſlain.

St. A'NDREW was taken to be the Patron of Scotland on account of a Viſion before a Battle, ſuppoſed to be won by the Picts againſt the English or Northumbrian Danes.

A'NDREW, as Knights of St. Andrew, an Order of Knighthood eſtabliſhed by Archiacus, King of Scotland, A. C. 809, called alſo Knights of the Thistle.

ANDROD'MAS [ἀνδρόδμας, of τὸ δαμάζειν ἀνδρας, i. e. of taming Men, Gr.] a kind of hard, heavy Blood-Stone, which is ſaid to bleed when rubb'd on a Whettſtone; alſo a precious Stone, bright as Silver, like a Diamond, in many Squares.

ANDRO'GYNUS [ἀνδρόγυνος, of ἀνὴρ a Man, and γυνή a Woman] an Hermaphrodite who is both Man and Woman, having the natural Parts of both Sexes; a Will-Jill or Scrat.

ANDROGY'NUS [Aſtology] ſuch a Planet as is ſometimes hot, and ſometimes cold.

ANDROI'DES [of ἀνδρῶς of a Man, and εἶδος Form, Gr.] an Autometon in the Form of a Man, which by means of certain Springs, &c. juſtly contriv'd, walks, ſpeaks, &c.

ANDRO'MEDA [Aſtronomy] a Northern Conſtellation conſiſting of 27 Stars.

ANDRO'SÆMON [ἀνδρόσαιμον, Gr.] St. John's Wort or Tutſan.

ANDRO'TOMY [of ἀνὴρ, gen. ἀνδρός, and τομή a Diſſection, Gr.] an anatomical Diſſection of human Bodies.

To ANE'AL, to bake or harden Glaſs, Tiles, &c. in the Fire.

ANE'CDOTE, a ſecret Hiſtory, ſuch as relates the ſecret Affairs of Kings and Princes; ſpeaking with too much Freedom or too much Sincerity, of the Manners and Conduct of Perſons in Authority.

ANE'CDOTON } [ἀνέκδοτον, Gr.] a Thing not given

ANE'KDOTON } forth, produced, or made publick.

ANELA'CIUS, a ſhort Knife or Dagger.

ANE'MIUS Furnus [with Chymiſts] a Wind Furnace for ſtrong Fires for diſtilling or melting.

ANEMO'METER [of ἀνέμος the Wind, and μέτρον, Gr. Meaſure] an Inſtrument or Machine for meaſuring the Strength of the Wind.

ANE'MONE [ἀνεμώνη, Gr.] the Emony or Wind-flower.

ANEMO'SCOPE [of ἀνέμος the Wind, and σκοπία to view, Gr.] a Machine or Device invented to ſhew the Change of the Air.

A'NES } the Spires or Beards of Barley, or any other

A'WNS } bearded Grain.

A'NETHUM [ἀνέθον, Gr.] the Herb Dill.

ANEU'RISM } [of ἀνευρύω to dilate, Gr.] a ſtretching

ANEY'RISM } or burſting of the Arteries, ſo that they beat and ſwell continually, till they ſometimes become as large as an Egg; the Swelling yields if it be preſſed with the Finger, but quickly recoils.

ANFE'LDTHYDE } [anfelðþýte, Sax.] a ſimple or

ANFEA'LTHILE } ſingle Accuſation. Thus it was among the Saxons, when the Oath of the Criminal and two more was ſufficient to diſcharge him; but his own Oath, and the Oath of five more, were required to free him from the Triplex Accuſatio.

ANFRA'CTUOUSNESS [anfractus, L.] the being full of Turnings and Windings.

ANGARI'A, the preſſing of Teams, Horſes, Men, &c. for publick Service.

ANGARIA [Old Records] any vexatious or troubleſome Service or Duty, done by a Tenant to his Lord.

ANGEI'OGRAPHY [of ἀγγεῖον a Veſſel and γραφή a Deſcription, Gr.] a Deſcription of Veſſels in the human Body, i. e. the Nerves, Veins, Arteries and Lymphaticks.

ANGEIO'TOMY [ἀγγειοτομία, of ἀγγεῖα Veſſels, and τομή of τέμνω, Gr. to cut] a cutting open the Veſſels, as in the opening a Vein or Artery.

A'NGEL [ἀγγέλ, of ἀγγέλλω, Gr. to do a Meſſage, angel, Sax.] a Meſſenger or Bringer of Tidings, and is moſt properly and generally apply'd to thoſe immaterial and intellectual Beings, which are uſed by God as his Miniſters to execute the Orders of Divine Providence.

ANGEL, a Gold Coin, in Value Ten Shillings, having the Figure of an Angel stamp on it.

ANGEL SHOT, Chain Shot, being a Cannon Bullet cut in two, and the Halves being joined together by a Chain.

ANGEL Bed, an open Bed without Bed-posts.

ANGE'LICA [Botany] an Herb.

ANGE'LICAL [αγγελικη, Gr.] a famous Dance among the Greeks.

ANGE'LICAL [angelicus, L.] pertaining to, partaking of the Nature of Angels.

ANGELICAL Garment, a Monkish Garment which Men put on a little before their Death, that they may receive the Benefit of the Prayers of the Monks.

ANGE'LICALNESS [of angelique, F. angelicus, L.] the being angelical, angelical Nature, &c.

ANGE'LICI, a Sect so denominated from their yielding extravagant Worship to Angels.

ANGE'LICUS Pulvis [Pharmacy] a Distinction that Schroder gives to Mercurius vita.

ANGELOT [Cookery] a certain sort of small French Cheese; also a Musical Instrument something like a Lute.

ANGERO'NA [among the Romans, so called of Angina, the Scurfey, as having cur'd the Romans of that Distemper] the Goddess of Patience or Silence; her Statue was placed on the Altar of Pleasure.

ANGERONA'LIA, Feasts celebrated to Angerona the Goddess of Patience and Silence.

A'NGI [in Surgery] those Swellings or Tumours in the Groin call'd Buboes.

ANGIGLO'SSI [of αγγις and γλωσσα the Tongue, Gr.] Persons who stammer in their Speech and Tongue, especially such as with great Difficulty pronounce the Letters, K, L and R.

A'NGILD [of an and gild, Sax. Payment] bare single Valuation or Compensation of a Criminal; the Satisfaction made for a Man or Thing; a Mulct or Fine.

ANGINA [with Surgeons] the Quinsy; an Inflammation of the Jaws and Throat attended with a continual Fever, and a Difficulty of Breathing and Swallowing, L.

ANGINA LINI [Botany] Dodder.

ANGIO'LOGY [αγγιολογια, of αγγια Vessels, and λογω to say, Gr.] a Treatise or Discourse of the Vessels of a human Body, as of the Veins, Arteries, Sinews, &c.

AN ANGLE [angulus, L.] a Corner; also a Rod with a Line and Hook for Fishing.

ANGLE [in Geometry] a Space comprehended between the meeting of two Lines, which is either greater or less, as those Lines incline towards one another or stand farther distant asunder, these Angles are either plain or spherical.

A Plain ANGLE [in Geometry] is the Distance or Opening of two Lines that touch one another in the same Plane; but so as not to make one straight Line, and the Lines that form it are called Legs, as in the Figure above; or it is a Space bounded by the Meeting of two Lines which cut one another on a Plane, as in the Figure, and are either right-lined, curvilinear, or mixed, the first of which are the Angles above.

Curvilinear ANGLE [Geometry] or crooked-lined Angle, is made by the Intersection or mutual Cutting one another of two crooked Lines, as in the Figure.

Mixt ANGLE [Geometry] is made by the Meeting of a right Line with a crooked or curved Line, as in the Figure.

A Spherical ANGLE [Geometry] is an Angle made by the Meeting of two Angles of great Circles, which intercept or mutually cut one another on the Surface of the Globe or Sphere, as the Figure ABC.

ANGLES, whether plain or spherical, may be considered as right, acute and obtuse.

A Right ANGLE [Geometry] is an Angle made by a Line falling perpendicularly on another, or that which subtends an Arch of 90 Degrees or a fourth part of a Circle as in the Figure, all Circles being commonly divided into 360 Parts, call'd Degrees.

An Acute ANGLE [Geometry] is an Angle that is less than a right Angle, or than 90 Degrees, as in the Figure, and is so called because the angular Point is sharp.

An Obtuse ANGLE [Geometry] is one which has its angular Point blunt or broad, and is greater than a right one, its angular Point consisting of more than 90 Degrees, as in the Figure A which is so much more than 90 Degrees, as B is less than 90, both together making a Semi-circle or 180 Degrees.

Right ANGLED Triangle, is one which has one right Angle, as the Angle A in the Figure, the other two B and C being both acute, and making both together but 90 Degrees.

Oblique ANGLE, is a Name used in common to both acute and obtuse Angles.

ANGLES have also several other Names according to their different Positions, their Relations to the respective Figures they are in, and the Lines that form them, as Adjacent ANGLES [Geometry] which have one Leg common to both Angles, and both taken together are equal to two right ones, as in the Figure the Angles ABC, CBD; CBD, DBE; DBE, EBA are contiguous Angles.

Opposite Vertical ANGLES [Geometry] are such as are made by two right Lines crossing each other, and which only touch in the angular Point; they are called Vertical on account of their being opposed ad verticem, or at the Top, as the Angles A and C are vertical or opposite Angles, as likewise C and D.

An ANGLE also in a Triangle is said to be opposite to the Side that subtends it, as the Angle A is opposite to the Side BC, and the Angle C to the Side AB, and the Angle B to the Side AC, as in the Figure.

Internal ANGLES [Geometry] if a Line cuts two others that are parallel, the Angles C and D are called internal and opposite, in respect to the external ones A and B, to which they are respectively equal as in the Figure.

Alternate ANGLES [Geom.] are the Angles E and D, and F and C, which are respectively equal to one another.

External ANGLES [Geometry] are the Angles of any right-lined Figure without it, when all the Sides are severally produced and lengthened; and all being taken together are equal to four right Angles.

Internal ANGLES [Geometry] are all Angles made by the Sides of any right-lined Figure within.

ANGLE at the Centre of a Circle, is an Angle whose Vertex is at the Center of the Circle, and whose Legs are two Radii of a Circle, as in the Figure.

An Angle in the Segment of a Circle, is that, which is included between two Chords, that flow from the same Point in the Periphery as in the Figure.

A Solid ANGLE [Geometry] is contained under more than two Planes or plain Angles, not being in the same Place and Meeting in a Point.

Equal solid ANGLES [Geometry] are such as are contained under plain Angles, equal both in Multitude and Magnitude.

ANGLE of Contact [Geometry] is that which a Circle or other Curve makes with a Tangent at the Point of Contact.

Horned ANGLE [Geometry] an Angle made by a right Line, either a Tangent or a Secant with the Periphery of a Circle.

Homologous ANGLES [Geom.] are such as in two Figures, retain the Order from the first in both Figures OX.

ANGLE at the Periphery [Geometry] is an Angle at the Segment comprehended between the two Chords AB and BD, and stands on the Arch AB.

Ciffoid ANGLE [Geometry] the inner Angle which is made by two convex spherical Lines intersecting each other.

Poleoid ANGLE [Geometry] an Angle in the Shape or Figure of an Hatchet.

Sifroid ANGLE [Geometry] an Angle in Form of a Sistrum.

ANGLES [in Anatomy] are understood of the Corners of the Eye or Canthi, where the upper Eye-lid meets with the under.

ANGLE of a Wall [Architecture] is the Point or Corner, where the two Faces or Sides of a Wall meet.

ANGLES [Astrology] Certain Houses of a Scheme of the Heavens, the first House or Horoscope is called the Angle of the East, the seventh the Angle of the West, the fourth House the Angle of the North, the tenth House the Angle of the South.

ANGLE of Longitude [Astronomy] is the Angle which the Circle of a Star's Longitude makes with the Meridian at the Pole of the Ecliptick.

ANGLE of the same Position [Astronomy] an Angle that is made by the Meeting of an Arch of a Meridian Line with an Arch of the Azimuth or any other great Circle that passes thro' the Body of the Sun.

ANGLE of Elongation [Astronomy] is the Difference between the true Place of the Sun, and the Geocentrick Place of the Planet.

ANGLE of Commutation [Astronomy] is the Difference between the true Place of the Sun, seen from the Earth, and the Place of a Planet reduced to the Ecliptick.

ANGLE of Incidence [in Catoptricks] is the lesser Angle made by an incident Ray of Light with the Plane of a Speculum; or if the Speculum be concave or convex with a Tangent in the Point of Incidence, or, as others define it, an Angle made by a Ray of Light falling on a Body with any Tangent Line of that Body that is next the luminous Body.

ANGLE of Incidence [in Dioptricks] is an Angle made by an incident Ray with a Lens or other refracting Surface.

ANGLE of or at the Center [in Fortif.] is the Angle G K F, which is formed by the Concurrence of two strait Lines drawn from the Angles of the Figure F C.

ANGLE of the Circumference [in Fortif.] is the next Angle made by the Arch, which is drawn from one Gorge to the other.

ANGLE of the Counterscarp [in Fortification] is formed by the two Sides of the Counterscarp meeting before the Middle of the Curtain.

ANGLE of the Curtain [in Fortification] or the Angle of the Flank B A E is formed by or contained between the Curtain and the Flank in any Piece of Fortification.

ANGLE of the Complement of the Line of Defence [in Fortification] is the Angle proceeding from the Intersection of the two Complements the one with the other.

Diminished ANGLE [in Fortification] is the Angle B C F which is formed by the Meeting of the outermost Sides of the Polygon and the Face of the Bastion.

ANGLE of the exterior Figure [in Fortification] is the same as the Angle of the Polygon, and is the Angle F C N form'd at the Point of the Bastion C, by the Meeting of the two outermost Sides or Bases of the Polygon F C and C N.

ANGLE of the interior Figure [in Fortification] is the Angle G H M, which is formed in H the Center of the Bastion by the Meeting of the innermost Sides of the Figure G H and H M.

ANGLE Flanking [in Fortification] is the Angle which is made by the two salant Lines of Defence, viz. the two Faces of the Bastion prolonged.

ANGLE flanking upwards [Fortification] is the Angle G L H formed by the flanking Line and the Curtain.

Flanked ANGLE [in Fortification] is the Angle B C S, which is made by the two Faces B C, C S, and is the utmost Part of the Bastion, most expos'd to the Enemy's Batteries, and is therefore called by some the Angle of the Bastion, or the Point of the Bastion.

ANGLE forming the Flank [Fortification] is that which consists of one Flank and one Demi-gorge; or it is composed by the Flank and that Side of the Polygon, running from the Flank to the Angle of the Polygon, and were it extended would cross the Bastion.

ANGLE forming the Face [Fortification] is an Angle made of one Flank and one Face.

ANGLE of the Moat [in Fortification] is an Angle which is made before the Curtain where it is intersected:

Re-entrant ANGLE } [Fortification] is an Angle which retires inwards towards the Place.

Salient ANGLE [Fortification] is an Angle which advances its Point towards the Field.

ANGLE of the Epaule } [Fortification] is the Angle ANGLE of the Shoulder } A B C, which is formed by the Lines of the Face B C and the Flank A B.

ANGLE flanking outward } [Fortification] is formed by ANGLE of the Tenaille } the two Lines salient in the Faces of the two Bastions extended, till they meet in an Angle towards the Curtain; and is that which always carries its Points in towards the Work, and is called also the Dead Angle or Angle of the Moat.

ANGLE of Elevation [in Mechanicks] an Angle comprehended between the Line of Direction of a Projectile, and a horizontal Line.

ANGLE of Direction [Mechanicks] an Angle comprehended between the Lines of Direction of two conspiring Forces.

ANGLE of Incidence [Mechanicks] an Angle made by the Line of Direction of an impinging Body in the Point of Contact.

ANGLE of Reflection [Mechanicks] an Angle made by the Line of Direction of a reflected Body, in the Point of Contact from which it rebounds.

ANGLES of a Battalion [Military Affairs] are made by the last Men at the Ends of Ranks and Files.

Front ANGLES [Military Affairs] the two last Men of the front Rank.

Rear ANGLES [Military Affairs] the two last Men of the Rear Rank.

ANGLE of the East [in Navigation] is that Point of the Compass that the Ship sails upon.

Optick ANGLE, is that which is contained or included between two Rays drawn from the extreme Points of an Object to the Center of the Pupil.

ANGLE of Inclination [Opticks] is the Angle made by a Ray of Incidence, and the Axis of Incidence.

ANGLE of the Interval of two Places [in Opticks] an Angle that is subtended by the Lines directed from the Eye.

ANGLE of Reflection [in Opticks] is an Angle formed by the reflected Ray, at the Point of Reflection, with the other Part of the Tangent Line.

ANGLE refracted [in Opticks] is an Angle between the refracted Ray and the Perpendicular.

ANGLE of Refraction [Opticks] is an Angle made by the Ray of Incidence, extended through another Medium (as out of the Air into the Water) and the Ray of Refraction.

Optick ANGLE } [in Opticks] is an Angle included between two Rays, drawn from the two extreme Points in an Object to the Center of the Pupil, as A B C, which is comprehended between the Rays A B and B C.

ANGLE [in Sciagraphy, i. e. Dialling] an Angle that is made by the strait Line, proceeding from the Sun to the Dial Plane.

To ANGLE [of Anſel, Sax. an Hook] to fish with an Angling Rod.

ANGLER [of Anſel, Sax.] one who fishes with an Angle.

ANGLIA, that Part of Great Britain, called England.

ANGLICISM [Anglicismum, L.] a Diction in the Idiom, or a manner of Speech peculiar to the English Tongue.

ANGLICUS Sudor, i. e. the English Sweat [with Physicians] an Epidemical Colliquative Fever, rise in England, such as was once in the Time of Henry VII. L.

ANGOBER, a sort of Pear.

ANGUE'LLS [with Falconers] small Worms ejected by Sick Hawks.

ANGUI'GENOUS [anguigenus, L.] ingendred or begotten of Serpents.

ANGUI'FER } [Astronomy] a Constellation or Clu-ANGUI'TENESS } ster of Stars, the Figure of which on a Globe represents a Man holding a Serpent.

ANGUI'NEAL [anguineus, L.] pertaining to an Eel.

APOLLO [according to the Poets] was the Son of Jupiter and Latona, born in the Island Delos, which lay under Water, floating in the Aegean Sea: Juno being enraged at her Husband's Amours, had covenanted with the Earth to allow no other Place; but Neptune out of Pity raised it up and fixed it. When Apollo came of Age, remembering to what Shifts and Extremities the Serpent Python had put his Mother, he slew him. After this, Apollo begat Æsculapius who restored Hippolytus to Life, for which Jupiter struck him with a Thunder-bolt. Apollo, because he could not be revenged of Jupiter himself, slew the Cyclops that made the Thunder-bolt, for which Jupiter being incensed, banished him out of Heaven, and deprived him of the Privileges of his Divinity for a Time: Upon which he entered entered himself into the Service of Admetus, King of Thes-saly, and was his Shepherd, and thence came to be esteemed the God of Shepherds. Afterwards falling under another Misfortune, by accidentally killing his Boy Hyacinthus, he fled to Troy, and there meeting with Neptune, under the like Misfortune, they assisted Laomedon in building his City, who having perfidiously denied them the Reward of their Labours, Neptune in Revenge almost drowned the City, and Apollo sent a Pestilence among the People. But at length Apollo re-assum'd his Divinity, and became one of the most noted of all the Gods, not only by the great Number of Oracles he is said to have given in several Parts of the World, but also by the several Functions attributed to him. See Delphos, Cortina, Tripes.

Apollo was one of the most genteel of the Heathen Gods, of whom they do not relate such filthy Stories as of the other. They make him the God of Wisdom, Physick, Musick, Learning, &c.

The Ancients represented him as a young Man, without a Beard, and Rays of Light about his Head, having in one Hand a Harp and three Graces, and in the other a Shield and Arrows.

He was also represented with long curled yellow Hair, crown'd with Laurel, in a purple Robe, a silver Bow in his Hand, placed on a Throne of Emeralds.

A'QUILA [Astronomy] the Eagle, a Constellation consisting of 76 Stars, according to the British Catalogue. This is the Eagle (according to the Poets) that carried Ganymedes up to Heaven, and presented him to Jupiter to be his Cup-bearer, although he was placed among the Stars upon another Account, i. e. when the Gods made a Distribution of the Birds among themselves, Jupiter he chose the Eagle; and also because he of all other Birds can fly against the Sun, and is not oppressed by his Rays, and therefore obtains the first Place among them. It is represented with expanded Wings, as tho' it were flying. Aglaosthenes relates, that Jupiter was brought up in Crete, and when he was diligently sought after there, he was caught up and carried to Naxos, and after he came to the Age of Manhood, took upon him the Kingdom of the Gods; and that going from Naxos on the Expedition against the Titans, he had the Eagle for his Companion, and it proving fortunate to him, he made the Eagle sacred, and placed it among the Stars. And this is the Reason of the Honour that it obtained in Heaven. It has four Stars, the middlemost is a bright one.

A'SHTAROTH [אשתרת Heb. or as the Septuagint Asdeta, or as the Phenicians called her Astroarche] was the Chief Goddess of the Sidonians; some take Luna [the Moon] to be meant, and some Venus.

That Luna is meant is probable, because the Pagans talked of the Sun and Moon as Husband and Wife, and in Jeremiah she is called the Queen of Heaven.

Philo Biblius relates, that this Astharoth having taken upon her the Shape of a Bull, travelled all over the World, and upon her Return landed at Tyre in Phœnicia, and there consecrated a Star, that she found in her Way, that had fallen from the Sky to the Earth; though some say she was worshipped in the Shape of an Ewe. The Manner of worshipping her was after the Manner of that of Venus, by committing Fornication in her Temple. It should seem that the Heathens thought, as she had a visible Influence in the Generation of Children, and upon the Humours and Affections of Women, so they ought in her Adoration to perform those Actions, unto which she incited them.

AUS'PEX, a Diviner by Birds; the Manner of his performing this Divination was thus; the auspex stood upon a Tower with his Head covered with a Gown peculiar to his Office, which was called Lena, and turning his Face towards the East, holding a short strait Rod in his Hand, only a little turning at one End, called Litmus; he marks out the Heavens into 4 Quarters, having done this, he stays and waits for the Omen, on which Quarter the Birds fly on.

AUSPICIA [of avis a Bird, and conspicio to behold or observe] Observations and Predictions taken from Birds.

Some of these Auspicia or Omens were taken from the Chattering or Singing of Birds and others from their flying: The former they called Oscines, the latter Præpetes; of the first sort were Crows, Pies, Owls, &c. of the second, Eagles, Vultures and the like.

These Auspicia were also taken from Chickens in a Coop, or Penn, and the Manner of divining from them was as follows: The Auspex or Augur, made his Observation early in the Morning, and commanding a general Silence, ordered the Coop to be opened, and threw down a Handful of Corn or Crumbs to them, and by their Actions afterwards took the Omens.

If the Chickens immediately ran fluttering to the Meat, if they scattered it with their Wings, if they past by it without taking Notice of it, or if they flew away; they accounted the Omen to be unfortunate, and to portend nothing but Danger or Mischance.

But if they leaped immediately out of the Coop, and fell to picking up the Meat so greedily, as to let some of it drop out of their Mouths upon the Pavement, they looked upon it as an Omen, of assured Happiness and Success.

Ba'al [in Heb. בעל, signifies Lord or Mighty] an Idol of the Moabites and Phœnicians, called also Bel, and is thought to have been the first of Idols.

When the Scripture mentions Baal without any other Addition, we are to understand the God, who by the Pagans was esteemed the Chief Deity, or Jupiter. So that in the Language of the Heathens Baal imports as much as Jehovah and Adonai in the sacred.

Baal Berith [בעל-ברית, Heb. i. e. the Lord of the Covenant] this was another God of the Phœnicians.

Baal Gad [בעל-גד, Heb. i. e. the Lord of a Troop] was the God from whose Providence and Will all worldly Felicity did proceed.

Baalim [בעלים, Heb. i. e. Lords] some learned Writers understand by Baalim the deified Souls of Men, and some apply it to the Semones or Semidei, i. e. to the half Gods of the Pagans. It is more probable, that they worshipped the Sun and Stars, of which they did daily experience their Goodness and Power.

Baalpe'or [בעל-פעור, Heb. Βεελπεωρ, Gr.] was an obscene Deity of the Moabites at Mount Peor beyond Jordan. Some think this to be Jupiter Tonans, i. e. Jupiter the Thunderer; others take it for Saturn or the Sun; but others are of Opinion that it was Priapus the lascivious and obscene Deity; for that the Jews worshipped him after the same manner, that the Greeks worshipped Priapus by committing Fornication in his Temple. And this Deity was chiefly worshipped by Women, and therefore he was named the God of Women.

Baalzebub [בעל-זבוב, Heb. Βαλ ζεβουβ, Gr. i. e. the Lord of Flies] was the God of Ekron, a City of the Philistines. Some have been of Opinion that the Israelites gave him this Name; because in the Performance of Sacrifices that were offered unto him, his Priests were tormented with Swarms of Flies; whereas several of the learned Jewish Rabbies say, and Scaliger from them, there was not a Fly to be seen in performing the Sacrifices to the true God.

Ba'anites [from one Baan their Ring-leader] a Sect of Hereticks in the ninth Century, who taught the Errors of the Manicheans.

Ba'bel [בבל, Heb. i. e. Confusion] a huge Tower in the Land of Shinar in Mesopotamia, said to have been built 5146 Paces high, having an equal Basis; the Passage up was round the Side, and had many Apartments and Rooms for People, Cattle, Horses, Carts, &c. inclosed within it. The Hands of all or most of the Inhabitants of the Earth were employ'd in it after the Flood, before they were separated; supposed to be begun by the Order of Nimrod, to secure them against a second Flood. It was render'd famous upon the account of the Confusion of Languages, which caused them to desist from the Attempt.

B'abewries, strange, odd, antick Works.

Baboo'n [probably of Babouin and Babion, F. but others derive it of Babe, by the Termination on making it signify a great Babe, by reason of its resembling human Kind] a large kind of Monkey.

Ba'bylon, anciently the Metropolis of Chaldaea, founded either by Nimrod or Belus, and by Ninus and Semiramis improv'd, so as to be accounted one of the seven Wonders of the World for its extraordinary Walls and Gardens. The River Euphrates ran thro' the middle of the City, the two Shores being joyn'd by a Bridge of stupendous Architecture: Some Authors write, that the City, when in its greatest Grandeur, was in Compass 46 Miles. The Walls were built by Queen Semiramis so large and high, that some write they were 200, others 250, and others 300 Feet high; but the most common receiv'd Measure is, that they were fifty Cubits high, and so broad that three Chariots might go upon them without Danger. Diodorus Siculus writes, that they were 300 or 350 Stadia in Compass, that is above twenty-two English Miles, and five Stadia high, having pleasant Gardens on them.

Ba'bbl, an Enemy to good Manners, and a profane Person [Hieroglyphically] were represented by a grunting Hog, the filthy Disposition of which caused it to be hated by all the Eastern People, insomuch that it was a great Crime for some Priests who waited upon the Altars of their Gods, to touch a Hog.

The BAPTISM of Passengers is performed with many Ceremonies; but in performing either of them, the Ships Crew are generally made drunk, for the Sailors pretend to to a customary Right to cut off the Beak-head of the Ship, unless the Captain or Master redeem it.

The Ceremony is as follows: The eldest of the Ship's Crew, who has past the Line or Tropick, having dressed himself fantastically, with a Grotesque Cap on his Head, his Face black'd, comes carrying in his Hand a Waggoner or some other Sea Book, followed by the rest of the Sailors disguised like himself, each of them bearing in his Hand some Kitchen Utensil, with Drums beating; the Leader places himself very gravely on a Seat prepared on the Decks, at the Foot of the Main Mast; and each Sailor or Passenger swears before this antick Magistrate, that he will see that this Ceremony be performed whenever it comes to his Turn. The Sailors are commonly heartily drenched with whole Buckets of Water poured upon them; but Passengers and those that will give a little Money, are more favourably treated, being only sprinkled with a little Water; Ship Boys are commonly put into a Cage and drenched at Discretion, and are afterwards obliged to whip one another, which they usually do very smartly.

BARO'METER [βαρομετρον, of βαρος heavy, and μετρον, Gr. Measure] an Instrument for estimating the Weight or Pillar of the Atmosphere, and the several minute Variations of the Weight of that Pillar; by which Variations the various Changes of the Weather are determined.

The first Inventor of it was Torricelli, at Florence, in 1643. from whence Father Merfenne brought it into France the Year following, 1644. and Monsieur Pascal tried it in 1646. and gave an account of it in a Piece printed in 1647; the Uses of this Instrument are to discover the Gravitation of the incumbent Atmosphere (one of the noblest philosophical Discoveries) the Changes of the Weather, &c.

The Mechanism of the Barometer is as follows: A Glass Tube A B, hermetically seal'd in A, having its Diameter about $\frac{1}{10}$ of an Inch, and its Length at least thirteen Inches, is filled with Mercury so justly, as not to have any Air over it, nor any Bubbles adhering to the Sides of the Tube, which is best done by means of a Glass Funnel, with a Capillary Tube; the Orifice of the Tube, filled after this manner, so as to overflow, is closely pressed by the Finger, so as to exclude any Air betwixt it and the Mercury, and thus immersed in a wooden Vessel of a convenient Diameter, so, however as not to touch the bottom: at the distance 28 Inches from the Surface of the Mercury, are fix'd two Plates, C E, and D F, divided into two Inches, and these again subdivided into any Number of smaller Parts: Lastly, the Tube is inclosed in a wooden Frame, to prevent its being broke, and the Basin open, though secured from Dust.

Many Attempts have been made to render the Changes in the Barometer more sensible, and so to measure the Atmosphere more accurately; which has given Rise to a great Number of Barometers of different Structures. Hence comes the Wheel Barometer, Diagonal Barometer, Horizontal Barometer, Pendant Barometer, &c.

A Marine BAROMETER being only a double Thermometer for Convenience at Sea. See Thermometer.

Observations for the Use of the Barometer.

1. The Motion of the Mercury in the Tube does not exceed 3 Inches in its rising and falling.

2. The rising of the Mercury generally presages fair Weather, and its falling foul; as Rain, Snow, high Winds and Storms.

3. The falling of the Mercury in very hot Weather presages Thunder.

4. The

4. The rising of the Mercury in Winter, fore shews Frost; and if the Mercury falls 3 or 4 Divisions in frosty Weather, a Thaw will certainly follow; but if the Mercury rises in a continued Frost, Snow will follow.

5. If soon after the falling of the Mercury foul Weather ensues, there will be but little of it; and on the contrary, if the Weather proves fair soon after the Mercury has risen, the same will happen.

6. If the Mercury rise much and high in foul Weather, and continues so for 2 or 3 days before the foul Weather is over, then continued fair Weather will ensue.

7. If the Mercury falls much and low in fair Weather, and continues so for 2 or 3 days before the Rain comes, then you may expect a great deal of wet, and very probably high Winds.

8. If the Mercury be unsettled in its Motion, it denotes uncertain and changeable Weather.

9. As to the Words that are graved near the Divisions of the Instrument, though for the most part the Alterations of the Weather will agree with them, yet they are not so strictly to be minded, as in the rising and falling of the Mercury according to the foregoing Observations; for if the Mercury stands at much Rain, and then rises up to Changeable, it then fore shews fair Weather, although not to continue so long as it would have done if the Mercury were higher; so Places which are more Northerly have a greater Alteration of the Rise or Fall of the Mercury, than those that are more Southerly.

Wheel BAROMETER is a Contrivance for the applying an Index to the common Barometer, which Index shews the Variation of the Altitude of the Mercurial Cylinder, which at most does not exceed 3 Inches, which nevertheless may be made as distinguishable as if it were 3 Foot or 3 Yards, or as much more as is desired; the Form of it is as here described.

BELLE'ROPHON. The poets tell us that the winged horse Pegasus carried Bellerophon, and that he flew the Chimæra of Amisodarus. Now the Chimæra, according to the common notion, had the fore-parts of a lion, the hinder-parts of a dragon, and the middle parts like those of a goat. The truth of the fable is, Bellerophon was an inhabitant of Phrygia, by birth a Corinthian, a man of prowess, who having built a long ship, ravaged the countries that lay near the sea. And the ship's name was Pegasus. And besides, King Amisodarus dwelt at the river Xanthus, near to which there was a very high mountain, call'd Telmessus, at the fore-part of which there were two ascents of the city of the Xanthians, but the third was backwards from Caria, and all the rest of it was very steep. In the middle of which there was a great chasm of the earth, from whence fire issued. Behind this mountain there was also another, call'd Chimæra, the ascent of which on the fore-part, as those that live near it report, was inhabited by a lion, and the hinder-part by a dragon, who used to be very mischievous to the shepherds and fellers of timber. And Bellerophon coming to that place, set the woody mountain on fire, so Telmessus being burnt, the beast perished. And thence the neighbouring inhabitants related, that Bellerophon coming thither with his Pegasus, flew the Chimæra of Amisodarus, from which event the fable took its rise.

anciently a sort of philosophers, which from their going naked were called gymnosophists, and were to the Indians, as the Chaldees to the Assyrians, and the Magi to the Persians, and the Druids to the ancient Britons and Gauls.

They were had in great reverence by the people, living for the most part austere and solitary lives, in caves and deserts, feeding upon herbs, being poorly apparelled, and for a time abstaining from all carnal pleasures; their opinions were, that the God Achari or Wisnu created the world by the administration of three perfect beings, whom he had first made for that design: these three are Bramba,

i. e. penetration, by this he created the universe; by Bres- chen, i. e. existing in all things, he preserves it; and by Mehaddia, i. e. the great Lord, he will destroy it. They pretend to have received four books from Bramba, in which books all knowledge is comprehended, and they hold the Metempsychosis or transmigration of souls, thro' several human bodies and beasts, before they can arrive at pleasure, and being purely spiritual; and for this reason they teach, that it is not lawful to kill, and eat any thing that is killed, and none of their tribes do eat any, but their soldiers;

they also hold the flesh of cows and peacocks as sacred, and therefore they abstain from it, and build hospitals for lame and decayed beasts, and buy birds of the Mahometans to set them at liberty. By their austere lives, great fastings, teaching the people, and expounding the mysteries of their religion to them, they have gotten a very great awe over the people, all over the Indies, and especially upon the BU'RNING the Dead. Tho' the custom of burying the dead was the most ancient, yet that of burning succeeded very early, and is said to have been introduced by Hercules. And it appears that burning the dead was used by the Greeks, in the time of the Trojan war.

The Philosophers were divided in their opinions concerning burning: those who were of opinion, that human bodies were compounded of water, earth or the four elements, were for having them buried or committed to the earth. But Heraclitus and his followers, imagining fire to be the first principle of all things, esteemed burning as the most proper; for every one thought it the most reasonable method, and the most agreeable to Nature, so to dispose of bodies, as they might soonest be reduced to their first principles.

Eustathius assigned two reasons why burning came to be of so general use in Greece. The first is, because bodies were thought to be unclean after the departure of the soul, and therefore were purified by fire; and the second, that the soul, being separated from the gross unactive matter, might be at liberty to take its flight to the heavenly mansions. The manner of burning the bodies was thus; the body was placed upon the top of the pile, but was rarely burnt without company; for besides the various animals they threw upon the pile, persons of quality were seldom burnt without a number of slaves or captives; they also poured into the fire all sorts of precious ointments and perfumes; and they also covered the body with the fat of beasts, that it might consume the sooner; for it was looked upon as a singular blessing to be quickly reduced to ashes.

It was also the custom to throw into the fire the arms of those that were soldiers, and the garments that the deceased had worn while living; and the Athenians were very profuse, in so much that some of their law-givers were forced to restrain them by severe penalties from defrauding the living by their liberality to the dead. The funeral pile was commonly lighted by some of the deceased's nearest relations, who made prayers and vows to the winds to assist the flame, that the body might quickly be reduced to ashes.

At the funerals of generals and great officers, the soldiers with the rest of the company made a solemn procession three times round the pile, to express their respect to the deceased; during the time the pile was burning, the friends of the deceased person stood by pouring forth libations of wine, and calling upon the deceased. When the pile had burnt down, and the flame had ceased, they extinguished the remains of the fire with wine, which having done, they collected the bones and ashes. The bones were sometimes wash'd with wine and anointed with oil. To

To distinguish the reliques of the body from those of the beasts and men burnt with it, this was done by placing the body of the person in the middle of the pile; whereas the men and the beasts burnt with it, lay on the sides. These bones and ashes thus collected, they put into urns, made either of wood, stone, earth, silver or gold, according to the quality of the person deceased.

BURNING of Women, it was the custom of the ancient Brittains, that when any great man died [if there was any occasion to be suspicious as to the manner of his death] his relations made enquiry among his wives concerning it, and if any of them were found guilty they were punished with fire and other torments.

BURNING [with Philosophers] is defined to be the action of fire upon some pabulum or fuel, whereby the minute or very small parts of it are torn from each other, put into a violent motion, and assuming the nature of fire itself, fly off in orbem, &c.

CA'DMUS [according to the Poets] was the king of Thebes, the son of Agenor king of the Phœnicians, and grandson to Epaphus. Jupiter having carried away Europa his sister, his father sent him to many parts of the world to seek her out, with a command never to appear before him, till he had found her. But Cadmus having made many tedious voyages, and not being able to learn what was become of her, went to Delphos to consult the oracle of Apollo, to know what was best for him to do, and received his answer, that, as some say, an ox, and as others say, a cow should meet him, him, which he was to follow; and there he should build a city, and settle an habitation. Accordingly an ox met him in a province of Greece, which was for that reason called Bœotia. Cadmus, in order to obtain the assistance of heaven in the affair of building the city, designed to sacrifice the ox to the goddess Minerva; and in order thereto, he sent his followers to the next fountain, called Dirce, to fetch water, but a terrible dragon there surprizing them, devoured them alive.

Upon this the Goddess Minerva advised Cadmus to slay the dragon, and having gotten the teeth out of his head, to sow them in the earth. He did so, and several companies of armed men sprung up, which fell a fighting, and destroyed one another, all but five, which being left alive, assisted Cadmus in building his city, and furnishing it with inhabitants.

The city they built, was in Bœotia, and called Thebes, where he reigned many years, and had several children by his wife Harmonia, Polydorus, Ino, Semele, the mother of Bacchus and Agave, who, being transported with fury in the company of the Menades, killed her own son Pentheus, who had by his speech discovered a dislike of the ceremonies of this God.

Cadmus is said to have lived to see all his posterity fall into extreme misery; and himself and wife were banished into Illyria or Sclavonia, where according as they desired, they were transformed into serpents.

Ulpian says, that Cadmus was but the cook of Agenor king of Tyre or Sidon, who ran away from his prince, on account of some ill deed, in company with one Harmonia, a noted strumpet; but yet laid the foundation of Thebes.

This pipe is a pass and safe-conduct among the allies of the nation who has given it, and in all embassies the ambassador carries it as the symbol of peace; and they are generally persuaded that a great misfortune would befall them if they violated the publick faith of the Calumet.

All their enterprises, declarations of war or conclusions of peace, as well as all the rest of their ceremonies, are confirmed with this Calumet; they fill that pipe with the best tobacco they have, and then present it to those with whom they have concluded any great affair, and then smoke out of the same after them.

CA'LUMNY [called by the Greeks Διαβολα, whence comes the Latin Diabolus, and Devil in English, the father of all calumny] an Athenian Deity, in honour of whom they built a temple. Lucian tells us, that Apelles, being accused by a Painter for having conspired against Ptolemy, having cleared himself of the accusation, Ptolemy, to make him amends, gave him 100 talents, and delivered his accuser into his hands to do what he pleased with him: Upon this, Apelles to be reveng'd on Calumny, painted a prince with large ears fitting upon a throne, with Suspicion and Ignorance near him; the prince sitting thus in state, and reaching forth his hand a great way off to Calumny, which he represented having a face very bright and sparkling, with extraordinary charms and incitements, and advancing towards the prince, holding a torch in her left hand, and by her right, dragging an innocent young man by the hair, he holding up his hands to heaven and imploring aid. Before Calumny was painted Envy, with a pale countenance and squinting eyes, which serv'd to set off Calumny, and make her appear the more acceptable. After her comes Repentance, represented by the figure of a lady in a mourning habit, with her garments rent, and turning her head towards a figure resembling Truth, weeping for sorrow and shame.

This picture Apelles gave to Ptolemy, and it was esteemed the best piece in the whole world.

The moral of this picture is, that Calumny worries and afflicts Innocence, which by means of a foolish or malicious Credulity, proceeding from Ignorance or Suspicion is received. The Calumniator dresses up, and orders all things by the assistance of Imposture, and by flattery insinuates himself into the good opinion of the hearer; but Truth appearing sooner or later, discovers the malice of the Falseness, and so there is nothing left to Calumny for her labour, but a bitter repentance.

CAPITAL Letters [with Printers] are the initial letters, wherein titles, &c. are composed, and all periods, verses, &c. commence; all proper names of persons, places, terms of Arts, Sciences and Dignities begin.

CAPITAL [in Architecture] is a principal and essential part of an Order of Column or Pilaster; and is different in different Orders, and is that which chiefly distinguishes and characterises the Orders.

The Corinthian CAPITAL, is much the richest, it has no Ovolo, and its Abacus is very different from those of the Dorick, Ionick and Tuscan. It has its faces circular hollowed inwards, having a rose in the middle of each sweep. It has only a brim, and a vase instead of an Ovolo and Anulets; the neck being much lengthen'd and enrich'd with a double row of eight leaves in each, bending their heads downwards, small stalks arising between, from whence the Volutes spring; but they resemble not those of the Ionick Capital, which are 16 in this instead of 4 in the Ionick, on each side 4 under the 4 horns of the Abacus, where the 4 Volutes meet in a small leaf, which turns backwards towards the corner of the Abacus. These leaves are divided each making three ranges of lesser leaves, whereof they are composed; again each lesser leaf is sometimes parted into three called Laurel leaves, but generally into 5 called Olive leaves. The middle leaf, which bends down, is parted into eleven. In the middle over the leaves is a flower, shooting out between the Stems and Volutes, like the rose in the Abacus. The height of this Capital is $2\frac{2}{3}$ modules, and its Projecture $1\frac{2}{8}$.

The Tuscan CAPITAL, is the most simple and unadorned. Its members or parts are no more than three; an Abacus, and under this an Ovolo or Quarter-round, and under that a Neck or Collarine.

Composite CAPITAL, take its name from its being composed of members borrowed from the capitals of other columns. See Plate Architecture.

From the Dorick, it takes a Quarter-round or Ovolo; from the Ionick, an Astragal under this, together with Volutes or scrolls; from the Corinthian, a double row of leaves, and in most other things resembles the Corinthian, generally consisting of the same members and the same proportion.

There is a flower in the middle of the Abacus, and leaves which run upwards under the horns, as in the Corinthian. It has flowers instead of stalks in the Corinthian, lying close to the vase or bell, which twist themselves round towards the middle of the face of the Capital. The height of this Capital is two modules $\frac{1}{3}$, and its Projecture one module $\frac{2}{3}$, as in the Corinthian. See Plate Architecture.

CA'STOR and Pollux [according to the Poets] were the offspring of Jupiter and Leda, queen of Tyndarus, king of Oebalia, in the manner following. Jupiter having had an intimate familiarity with Leda, she brought forth two large eggs, of that which was of Jupiter came Pollux and Helena, and from that which was of Tyndarus proceeded Castor and Clytemnestra.

The two brothers, Castor and Pollux, had such an entire love one for the other, that they always perform'd their undertakings together, and were, as it were, inseparable; tho' Pollux only was immortal by the privilege of his birth, as proceeding from Jupiter: but Pollux having so intire a love for his brother Castor, he prevailed upon Jupiter to admit him into the number of his sons. And Jupiter made Castor partaker of immortality with Pollux, so that they were both to live successively one after another, till the time that they were both translated to the signs of the Zodiack, where they represent the constellation call'd Gemini.

But they did not attain this honour before they had merited it by many glorious actions; for Theseus having carried away their sister Helena, they forced him to restore her, and clear'd the coast of all the pirates that infested the sea: and for this reason they were accounted and adored among the deities of the sea; and the Heathens sacrificed unto them white lambs.

The Romans imagining that they received assistance from them in the battle against the Latins, near the lake Regillus, therefore built them a stately temple; and commonly swore by their names. The oath that women swore was Æcastor, i. e. Ædes Castoris, the temple of Castor; and the mens oath was Ædepol, i. e. Ædes Pollucis, the temple of Pollux.

The Locrenses affirm'd, that they saw them leading their army against the Crotonians, riding upon white horses, with caps on their heads, and lances in their hands: and from this they are thus represented in painting and sculpture.

Homer relates, that Castor and Pollux were companions with Jason, in fetching back the golden fleece, in which expedition they shew'd their courage and skill in arms: and that being overtaken by a violent tempest in the voyage, they saw two flames of fire lighting on the heads of Castor and Pollux, which proved to be happy omens or fore-tokens of their safety. And hence came the ancient custom of mariners, that when meteors, or the dry exhalations of the earth, being inflamed in the air, appeared about their ships in a storm, they call'd them Castor and Pollux when two fires or lights appear; and Helena, when but one: and when there are two fires appear at sea together, they prognosticate and expect safety, and an ensuing calm; but if but one, they prepare themselves for the Extremity of a violent storm; supposing Helena as dangerous to sailors, as she was to Troy.

CAUSE [in Term] a trial or an action brought before a judge to be examined and disputed.

CAUSE [causa, L.] cause is that which produces an effect, or that by which a thing is. Causes are divided into four kinds.

Efficient CAUSE, is that which produces another cause; also an external Cause from which any thing derives its being or essence by a real action. There are of this several species.

A distant CAUSE, so is a grandfather in respect to his grandson.

An equivocal CAUSE, is that which is of a different kind and denomination from its effect; as God, with respect to his creatures.

An instrumental CAUSE, the instruments with which a piece of work is done.

An intellectual CAUSE, a man with respect to what he does with judgment.

A free CAUSE, such is a man who walks.

A natural CAUSE, the sun.

A necessary CAUSE, the fire that burns wood.

A proper CAUSE, as the sun of light: so also the sun giving light to a chamber, the window is but the conditional Cause, without which the Effect would not have been; conditio sine qua non.

The physical CAUSE, is that which produces a sensible corporeal Effect; as the sun is the Cause of heat; also the fire which burns a house.

The moral CAUSE, the man who sets it on fire; also that which produces a real Effect; but in things immaterial, as repentance is the Cause of forgiveness.

A total CAUSE, is that which produces the whole Effect, as God in creating Adam, because nothing concurred with him in it.

Partial CAUSE, is that which concurs with some other in producing the Effect, the father and mother of a child; because both the one and the other were necessarily concerned in the generation of it.

Accidental CAUSE, as the sun that kills a man by its heat, because he was ill disposed before.

Productive CAUSE, is the mother of her child.

A preserving CAUSE, as the nurse of her child.

An universal CAUSE, is that which by the extent of its power may produce all Effects, as a father in respect to his children, because they are like him in nature.

Universal CAUSE, the air that enters an organ, is so of the harmony of that organ.

A particular CAUSE, is that which can only produce a single Effect; or a certain kind of Effects.

The particular CAUSE of the harmony of an organ, is the disposition of each pipe, and he who plays.

These are all distinctions that some Logicians make of the efficient Cause.

The final CAUSE [among Logicians] is the end for which a thing is, or the motive which induced a man to act. This again is distinguished into principal ends and accessory ends. The principal ends are those that are principally regarded, and the accessory ends are considered only as over and above.

CAUSE [in Metaphysics] is an active principle influencing the thing caused.

Interval CAUSE, is that which partakes of the essence of the thing caused; viz. Matter and Form.

External CAUSE, is that which has an outward influence, viz. Efficient and Final.

The material CAUSE [among Logicians] is that out of which things are formed; as silver is the matter of a silver cup.

The formal CAUSE [with Logicians] is that which makes a thing what it is, and distinguishes it from others; as a stool, a table, &c.

First CAUSE, that which acts by itself, and from its own proper force and virtue; as God is the first Cause.

Second CAUSES, are such as derive the power or faculty of acting from a first cause.

To CAUSE [causari, L.] to be the cause of, to effect.

CAU'SEY { [probably of causie, O. F. strewed with CAU'SWAY } chalk or flint] a high way, a bank raised in marshy ground for foot passage.

CAUS'DICKS [causidici, L.] lawyers or pleaders of causes.

CAUSO'DES [καυσωδης, Gr.] a continual burning fever, L.

CAU'SON { [καυσω of καίω, Gr. to burn] a burning
CAU'SUS } fever, one attended with greater heat than other continued fevers, an intolerable thirst and other symptoms, which indicate an extraordinary accension of the blood.

CAU'STICK [καυσικος, Gr.] burning or corroding.

CAU'STICK Stone [with Surgeons] a composition of several ingredients for burning or eating holes in the part to which it is applied.

CAUSTICK Curve [in the higher Geometry] a curve formed by the concurrence or co-incidence of the rays of light reflected or refracted from some other curve.

CAU'STICKNESS [of causticus, L. caustique, F. of καυσικος of καίω, Gr. to burn] caustick quality.

CAU'STICKS [in Surgery] things which burn the skin and flesh to an eschar; as burnt iron, brags, &c.

CAU'TELOUS [cauteleux, F. cautus, L.] wary, cautious, heedful.

CAUTERIZA'TION, an artificial burning made by a cautery.

To CAUTERIZE [καυτηραζειν, Gr.] to apply a cautery.

CAU'TERY [καυτηριον of καίω, Gr. to burn] a burning operation.

Actual CAU'TERY [so called because it has an actual power of burning any thing, and has an immediate operation] fire, or an instrument made of gold, silver, copper or iron heated in fire.

Potential CAU'TERY [so called, because it has a certain power of burning, &c. and produces the same effect but in a longer time] a Caustick-stone, or composition made of quick-lime, soap, calcined tartar, &c.

Silver CAU'TERY [so called, because made of silver, dissolved in three times the weight of spirit of nitre, and prepared according to Art] this is accounted the best sort of Cautery, and will continue for ever, if it be not exposed to the air, and is otherwise called the infernal stone.

CAU'TING Iron [with Farriers] an iron to burn or sear the parts of a horse which require burning.

CAU'TION, heed, wariness, heedfulness; also warning or notice before-hand, F. of L.

CAU'TIONARY [of cautio, L.] given as pledge or pawn, as cautionary towns.

CAUTIO'NE admittenda, a writ lying against a bishop, holding an excommunicate person in prison for contempt, notwithstanding that he offers sufficient caution or pledges to obey the commands and orders of the church for the future.

To CAU'TION [cautionner, F.] to give notice of, to advise.

CAU'TIOUS [cautus, L. cauteleux, F.] provident, heedful, wary, well advised.

CAU'TIOUSNESS [of cautio, L.] wariness, circumspectness.

CAW'KING Time [with Falconers] the treading time of hawks.

CAWK Stone, a kind of mineral, a-kin to the white milky mineral juices of lead mines.

CAYA [of cax, Sax.] a key or water-lock, Old Law.

CAYA'GIUM, a toll or duty paid for landing goods at some key or wharf.

CAY'MAN, a kind of crocodile.

CA'ZIMI [with Astrologers] the center of the sun. A planet is said to be in Cazimi, when it is not above 70 degrees distant from the body of the sun.

To CEASE [cessare, L.] to leave off or give over, to forbear or discontinue; to be at an end.

CEA'SLESS, without ceasing, Milton.

CE'CA [at Corduba in Spain] a religious house, from whence whence the Spaniards have framed this proverb to go from Coca to Meca, i. e. to turn Turk or Mahometan.

CE'DAR [cedrus, L. of κίδρεα, Gr.] a large tree, ever green, delighting in cold and mountainous places, the wood is of a very bitter taste, and by reason of its bitterness is distasteful to worms, and is by that means almost incorruptible.

CE'DMATA [κίματα, Gr.] humours that fall into the joints, especially about the hips, L.

CE'DRATED [cedratus, L.] anointed with juice or oil of cedar-trees.

CE'DRELA'TE [Κεδρελάτι, Gr.] the large sort of cedar, which grows as big as a fir-tree, and yields rosin or pitch as that does.

CE'DRIA [Κεδεία, Gr.] the rosin or pitch that runs out of the great cedar.

CEDRI'NE [cedrinus, L.] of or belonging to the cedar-tree.

CE'DRIUM, the oil or liquor that issues out of the cedar-tree, with which the ancients used to anoint books and other things to preserve them from moths, worms and rottenness; the Aegyptians used it for the embalming of dead bodies.

CE'DROSTIS [Κεδροστis, Gr.] the white vine which grows in hedges, briony, L.

CE'DRUS, the cedar-tree, L.

CEI'LING [with Architects] the upper part or roof of a lower room; or a lay or covering of plaster over laths, nailed on the bottom of the joists that bear the floor of an upper room, &c.

CE'LANDINE [Chelidonia, L. χελιδόνα of χελιδόνες, Gr. swallows] the herb otherwise called swallow-wort on account of a tradition that swallows make use of it as a medicine for the eye-sight.

CELARE'NT [with Logicians] a syllogism, whose second proposition is an universal affirmative, and the rest universal negatives.

CELA'STROS, the staff-tree, a plant.

CELA'TURE [calatura, L.] the art of engraving or cutting in metals.

CE'LEBRABLE [celebrabilis, L.] that may be or worthy to be performed with much solemnity.

CELE' [κνήλη, Gr.] a tumour or swelling in any part of the body, especially in the groin.

To CE'LEBRATE [celebratum, L.] to honour a person with praises, inscriptions, monuments or trophies; to keep an ordnance or festival.

CE'LEBRATED [celebratus, L.] highly honoured; renowned famous; also solemnized.

CE'LEBRATEDNESS } [celebritas, L. celebrité, F.] fa-CELEBRATENESS } mousness, renownedness.
CELE'BRIOUSNESS }

CELEBRATION, the act of celebrating, the doing a thing with solemnity and ceremony.

CELE'BRIOUS [celebris, L. celebre, F.] famous, &c.

CELE'BILITY [celebritas, L.] famousness, publick repute; magnificence, pomp.

CELE'RITY [celeritas, L.] swiftness, expedition, speed.

CELERITY [in Mathematicks] an affection of motion; by which any moveable runs through a given space in a given time.

CELE'RRIMI descensus linea [with Mathematicians] is the curve of the swiftest descent of any natural body; or that curved or crooked line, in which an heavy body, descending by its own gravity or weight, would move from one given point to another, in the shortest space or time.

CE'LERY, an herb much used in winter sallies.

CELE'STIAL [cælestis, L.] heavenly, divine, excellent.

CELE'STIALNESS [of cælestis, L.] heavenliness.

CELESTI'NES, an order of monks founded by one Peter a Samnite, who was afterwards Pope by the name of Celestin V.

CE'LIAC Passion [of κοιλία, Gr. the belly] a kind of flux of the belly, wherein the food does not indeed pass perfectly crude, but half digested.

CE'LIBACY } [cælibatus, L.] the state or condition of CE'LIBATE } unmarried persons, a single life.

CE'LIBATENESS } [of cælibatus, L. celibat, F.] bat-CE'LIBATESHIP } chelorship.

CELI'COLI [i. e. Heaven-worshippers] certain vagabonds condemned in the rescripts of the Emperor Honorius amongst heathens and hereticks, A. D. 408.

CE'LLA [some derive it of קלל Heb. a prison, or where any thing is shut up] a cell, a privy chamber, a partition in a monastery, where a monk lies, &c. L.

CE'LLAR [cellarium, L.] an apartment in the lowest part of a building under ground.

CE'LLARAGE, cellar-room; also the rent to be paid for the use of a cellar.

CE'LLARIST [cellarius, L.] one who keeps a cellar or buttery; the butler in a religious house or monastery.

CELLS [with Anatomists] are little bags or bladders where fluids or matter of different sorts are lodged; common both in animals and vegetables.

CELLS [with Botanists] are the partitions or hollow places in the husks or pods of plants, in which the seed is contained.

CELLS, [cella, L.] the little divisions or apartments in honey-combs, where the young bees, &c. are distributed.

CE'LLULA, a little cell or buttery, L.

CE'LLULÆ adipose [Anatomy] the loculi or little cells wherein the fat of bodies that are in good habit is contained.

CELLULÆ intestini coli [with Anatomists] the cavities or hollow spaces in the gut colon, where the excrements lodge for some time, that they may cherish the neighbouring parts with their heat, and digest any crudities.

CELOTOMI'A [of κλήη a rupture and τομή, Gr. a cutting] the operation of the Hernia.

CE'LSA [a barbarous term of Paracelsus] a small collection of vagrant spirits that endeavour to make their exit by their continual motion at any part of the body.

CE'LSITUDE [celstudo, L.] height, highness, tallness.

CEME'NT [cementum, L.] a strong, cleaving sort of mortar or solder.

CEME'NT [commonly pronounced Simmon] a compound of pitch, brick-dust, plaster of Paris, &c. used by chacers, repairers and other artificers to be laid under their work to make it lie firm to receive impressions made by punches.

CEMENT [with Chymists] any lute or loam, by which vessels us'd in distillation are joined or cemented together.

CE'MENT Royal, a particular manner of purifying gold, by laying over it beds of hard paste made of a composition of one part of Sal Armoniack, and two of common salt, and four of potters earth or brick-dust, the whole being moisten'd well with urine.

CEMENT [in Chymical Writers] is expressed by this character Z.

To CEME'NT [cementare, L.] to solder, to join, to fasten together; to fill with cement or Simmon.

CEMENTATION, a cementing or close joining with cement.

CEMENTATION [with Chymists] the purifying of gold made up into thin plates with layers of royal cement.

CE'NCHRIAS [κένχρεον, Gr. miller] a spreading inflammation, called shingles or wildfire, call'd lenchrias from its figure resembling the seed of Millet or Hirse, and is the same with Herpes Miliaris.

CENCHRITIS [κένχρεας, Gr.] a precious stone, all speckled as it were with millet-seeds.

CE'NCHROS [κένχρεον, Gr.] Millet or Hirse, a small grain.

CE'NDULÆ [in Old Lat. Rec.] Shendles or Shingles, small pieces of wood to cover the roof of an house, instead of tiles.

CENANGI'A [κεναγγία, of κενόω to empty and ἀγγίον a vessel, Gr.] an evacuation of vessels by opening a vein; & letting blood.

CENELLÆ [Old Latw] acorns.

CENOBITE. See Cenobite.

CENOSIS [κένωσις, Gr.] an emptying or voiding.

CENOSIS [in Medicine] a discharging of humours out of the whole or some part of the body.

CE'NOTAPH } [κενοτάφιον, Gr.] an empty tomb, see

CENOTA'PHIUM } up in honour of the dead; especially when the body is buried in another country.

CENSA'RIA [Old Rec.] a farm or house let ad censum, i. e. at a standing rent.

CENSA'RII [in Doomsday Book] such persons as may be assessed or taxed.

To CENS'E [q. d. to incense, incendere, L. to burn] to perfume with incense.

CE'NSER [q. d. incenser] a perfuming-pan, a vessel to burn incense in.

CE'NSOR [censur, F.] a master of discipline, a judge or reformer of manners, L.

CENSOR, a magistrate among the Romans, who valu'd and tax'd men's estates, L.

CENSO'RIOUS [censorius, L.] apt to censure, find fault with or reprove; critical, nice.

CENSO'RIOUSNESS [of censorius, L.] aptness to censure.

CENSURABLE, liable to be censured.

CENSURABLENESS, liableness to be censured.

CENSURAL, pertaining to assessments or valuation.

CENSURAL Book, a register of taxations.

CENSURE [censura, L.] reproof, correction made by a superior; also criticism, judgment, whereby any book or other thing is condemned.

To CENSURE [censurer, F.] to criticize or judge, to find fault with.

CENSURE [in some manors in Cornwall and Devonshire] a custom whereby all the Resiants above the age of 16 are required to swear fealty to the Lord, to pay two pence per Poll and one penny per annum.

CENT [abbreviation of centum, L. an hundred] as Money lent at 5 per Cent, i. e. 5 pounds for the use of 100.

CENTAUR [with Astron.] a southern constellation represented on a globe in that form, and consisting of 40 stars.

CENTAURS [κενταύροι την αὐγαν, because Ixion begot them on a cloud; or, as others say, of κεντέιν to prick or push, and αὐξ an ox] monsters, half men and half horses, which, according to the poets, were the sons of Ixion or the night.

Pliny affirms, that he saw one of those monsters embalm'd at Rome, and Plutarch avers the same in his feast of the 7 Sages; but Palaphatus is of opinion the fable was invented upon this, that when Ixion reigned in Theffaly, a herd of bulls on mount Pelios ran mad, and render'd all the rest of the mountain inaccessible; the bulls also coming down on the cultivated lands, shook down the trees and fruit, and were very injurious to the labouring beasts. Upon which, Ixion issued out a proclamation, that he would give a great reward to any one that should rid the place of these bulls. Upon which, certain young men dwelling at the foot of the mountain in a village called Nephele, contrived to teach horses. For before that time riding upon horses was unknown, and they were only used in chariots, &c. These young men mounting the horses, rode up towards the bulls, and making an incursion into the middle of the herd, wounded them with darts, and when the bulls ran at them they fled from them, for the horses were too swift for the bulls. And when the bulls made a stand, they turn'd back and attack'd them again, and by this means kill'd them; and thence they were called Centaurs, because they attacked the bulls with sharp-pointed instruments. Upon this, these Centaurs having received their money of Ixion for the exploit they had done, and so becoming wealthy, they grew arrogant, boasting and contumelious, and committed many disorders. Palaphatus.

CENTE'NAR } a foreign weight of 100, 112, 125, 128,

CENTAR } 132, 140 pound weight.

CENTENARIOUS [centenarius, L.] belonging to 100 years.

CENTENARY [centenarius, L.] of or pertaining to an hundred.

CENTESM, in the decimal divisions of degrees, feet, &c. is the hundredth part of an integer.

CENTICIPITOUS [centiceps of centum and caput, L.]

CENTI'FIDOUS [centifidus, L.] divided into 100 parts or ways.

CENTIFO'LIUS [centifolius, L.] having or producing 100 leaves.

CENTINODY [centinodia, i. e. hundred knots] an herb.

CENTIPEDE [centipes, L.] a worm, &c. having 100 or many feet.

CENTNAR [at Lubeck] is 8 lispounds, and a lispound is 28 pound.

CENTO, a patch'd garment made up of divers shreds, L.

CENTO, a poem compos'd of several pieces pick'd up and down out of the works of other persons.

CENTONA'LIS [with Botanists] wild-rue, L.

CENTONA'RII [among the Romans] were officers, whose business was to provide tents and other warlike furniture, called Centones; or else officers whose business it was to quench the fires that the enemies engines had kindled in the camp.

CENTRAL [centralis, L.] of or pertaining to, or seated in the center or middle.

CENTRAL Fire [with Chymists] that fire which they imagine to be in the center of the earth, the fumes and vapours of which make the metals and minerals, and ripens and brings them to perfection.

CENTRAL Rule, a rule invented by Sir Thomas Baker, to find the center of a circle, design'd to cut the parabola in as many points as an equation to be constructed has real roots.

CENTRA'TION [with Paracelsians] the principal root or foundation of any thing; as God is the center of the universe; the brain the center of the spirits, and the heart the center of life.

CENTRE [centrum, L.] the middle point of any thing; especially of a circle or sphere from whence all lines drawn to the circumference are equal.

CENTRE of a Sphere, is a point from which all the lines drawn to the surface are equal.

CENTRE of a Deal, is that point where the axis of the world intersects the plane of the deal; and so in those dials that have centres, it is that point, wherein all the hour lines meet. If the deal plane be parallel to the axis of the earth, it will have no centre at all; but all the hour lines will be parallel to the stile and to one another.

CENTER of a Conick Section, is the point where all the diameters concur.

CENTRE of the Equant [Old Astron.] is a point in the line of the Aphelion, being so far distant from the centre of the Eccentrick towards the Aphelion, as the sun is from the centre of the Eccentrick towards the Perihelion.

CENTRE of an Ellipsis } [Geometry] a point in that fi-

CENTRE of an Oval } gure, where the two diameters, called the Transverse and the Conjugate, intersect mutually one another.

CENTRE of an Hyperbola, is a point in the middle of the Transverse Axis, which is without the figure, and common to the opposite section.

CENTRE common of the gravity of two bodies [Geometry] is a point in a right line which joins their centres together, and so placed in that line, that their distances from it shall be reciprocally as the weight of those bodies is. And if another body shall be set in the same right line, so that its distance from any point in it be reciprocally as the weight of both the former bodies taken together, that point will be the common centre of gravity of all three, &c.

CENTRE of Oscillation, the centre of the swing of a pendulum; so that if the pin of the pendulum, fastened above, be taken for the center of the circle, whose circumference divides the ball or bob into two equal parts, the middle point of the arch, so dividing the ball, is the Centre of Oscillation.

CENTRE [with Masons] a wooden mould to turn an arch.

CENTRE of the Body, the heart, from which, as from the middle point, the blood continually circulates round all the other parts.

CENTRE of magnitude of a Body [with Geomet.] a point about which a body being fasten'd, is as equally as possible from its extremities or ends.

CENTRE of Gravity [in Mechanicks] a point on which a body being suspended or hung up from it, all its parts will be in an equal ballance one to the other.

CENTRE of heavy Bodies, in our globe is the same as the centre of the earth, towards which all such bodies naturally endeavour to descend.

CENTRE of a regular Polygon, &c. is the same with the center of a circle or sphere drawn within such a body, so as to touch all its sides.

CENTRE of a Parallelogram, the point wherein its diagonals intersect.

CENTRE of a Bastion, a point in the middle of the gorge of the bastion, whence the capital line commences.

CENTRE of a Battalion, the middle of a battalion, where there is usually a square space left.

CENTRE of Attraction [in the New Astronomy] that point to which the revolving planet or comet is attracted or impelled by the force or impetus of gravity.

CENTRE of Percussion [with Philosophers] is that point of a body in motion, wherein all the forces of that body are considered as united in one.

CENTRE of a Curve of the highest kind, is the point where two diameters concur.

To CENTRE, to meet as it were in a point.

CENTRE-FISH, a kind of sea-fish.

CENTRIFUGAL Force [with Mathematicians] is the endeavour of any thing to fly off from the center in the tangent. For all moving bodies endeavour after a rectilinear motion, because that is the easiest, shortest and most simple. And if ever they move in any curve, there must be something that draws them from their rectilinear motion, and detains them in the orbit, whenever the centripetal force ceases, the moving body would strait go off in a tangent to the curve in that very point, and so would get still farther from the center or focus of the motion.

CENTRIPE'TAL Force [with Philosophers] is that force by which any body, moving round another, is drawn down or tends towards the centre of its orbit; and is much the same with gravity.

CENTROBA'RIAL, of or pertaining to the center of gravity.

CENTROBA'RIC Method [in Mechanicks] a certain method of determining the quantity of a Surface or Solid by means of the centre of gravity of it.

CENTRO'SE [centrosus, L.] full of knots and knurs.

CE'NTRUM [with Botanists] the herb Clary, I.

CENTRUM Phonicum [in Acousticks] is the place where the speaker stands in polysyllabical echoes.

CE'NTRUM Phonicumpticum, is the place or object that returns the voice in an echo.

CENTRUM tendinosum [with Anatomists] a point or centre, wherein the tails of the muscles of the diaphragm meet; this centre is perforated towards the right side for the Vena cava, and towards the left backwards the fleshy part of it gives way to the gula. Between it and its two inferior processes the descending trunk of the great artery, thoracic duct and vena Azygos do pass.

CE'NTRY [probably contracted of Sanctuary] a sentinel or private soldier, posted so as to prevent being surpriz'd by an enemy.

CENTRY [with Architects] a mold for an arch.

CE'NTRY-Box, a wooden hutch, to screen a sentinel from the injuries of the weather.

CENTUMGE'MINUS [centumgeminus, L.] an hundred-fold.

CENTU'MVIRI [among the Romans] a court of 100 judges, they were at their first institution 105 in number, and this number was afterwards augmented to 180; but yet always retained the same name.

CENTU'MVIRAL, of or pertaining to the centumvirate.

CENTUNCULA'RIS [with Botanists] the herb cud-

CENTU'PLE [centuplex] an hundred-fold.

To CENTU'PLICATE [centuplicatum of centum and plico, L. to fold] to fold or double an hundred-fold.

CENTU'RICE [among the Roman people] certain parties consisting each of 100 men. Thus divided by Servius Tullius the sixth King of Rome, who divided the people into six classes. The first class had 30 centuries, and they were the richest of all; the second, third and fourth consisted each of 20 centuries, and the sixth class was counted but one century, and comprehended all the meaner sort of people.

To CENTU'Riate [centuriatum, L.] to divide into hundreds, or distribute into bands.

CENTURIA'TORS [of centuria, L.] four Protestant divines of Magdeburg in Germany, who divided the church-history into centuries of years.

CENTU'RION [centurio, L.] a commander or captain over 100 soldiers.

CE'NTURY [centuria, L.] an age containing 100 years; a band of 100 foot soldiers.

CEPHALA'LGICA [κεφαλαλγικά, Gr.] medicines good for the head-ach.

CE'PHALALGY [cephalgia, of κεφαλαλγία of κεφαλή the head and ἄλγος pain, Gr.] any pain in the head; but some appropriate it chiefly to a fresh head-ach; one that proceeds from intemperance or an ill disposition of the parts.

CEPHALA'RTICKS [of κεφαλή the head, and καθαρτικὸς purging] medicines which purge the head.

CEPHA'LICA [with Anatomists] the cephalick vein, is the outermost vein that creeps along the arm, between the skin and the muscles, it is called the Cephalick Vein from κεφαλή, Gr. a head, because the ancients used to open it rather than any other for diseases of the head; but since the discovery of the circulation of the blood, it is accounted equal, whether the blood be taken from the Cephalica, Medianā or Basilica, L.

CE'PHALICK Line [in Chiromancy] the line of the head or brain.

CE'PHALICK Medicines [with Surgeons] medicines apply'd to fractures of the head.

CE'PHALICKS, medicines good for distempers in the head.

CE'PHALOIDS [in Botany] a term by some who ascribe virtues to plants from their signatures, apply'd to those plants which bear any resemblance to a head, as the Poppy, Piony, &c.

CE'PHALOMANCY [cephalomantia, L. of κεφαλομαντεία, Gr. of κεφαλή the head and μαντεία divination] a divination by the head of an ass, which they broiled on the coals, and after having muttered a few prayers, they repeated the persons names or the crime, in case only one was suspected, at which if the jaws made any motion and the teeth chattered against one another, they thought the person that had done the ill deed sufficiently discovered.

CE'PHALOPHARY'NGÆI [with Anatomists] are the first pair of muscles of the upper part of the gullet; they proceed from beside the head and neck, and are more liberally bestow'd upon the coat of the gullet, L.

CE'PHALOPHARY'NGÆUM [with Anatomists] is a muscle arising from that part, where the head joins to the first vertebra of the neck, from whence it descends down and spreads with a large plexus or fold of fibres about the Pharynx, and seems to make its membrane, Gr.

CEPHALOPO'NY [of κεφαλή and πόνος pain, Gr.] a pain or heaviness in the head.

CEPI corpus [Law term] a return made by the sheriff that upon an exigent, or other process, he has taken the body of the party sued.

CEPIONIDES, certain precious stones as clear as crystal, in which a person may see his face.

CEPI'TES, a precious stone of the agate kind.

CERACHA'TES [κεραχάτης, Gr.] an agate-stone of a wax-colour.

CERAMI'TES [κεραμίτης, Gr.] a precious stone of the colour of a tile.

CE'RASUS [κέρασος, Gr.] a cherry-tree.

CERATACHA'TES [of κέρας an horn, and ἀχάτης an agate, Gr.] a sort of agate stone, the veins of which resemble the shape of an horn.

CERATAMA'LGAMA [of κηρός wax and amalgama] a mollifying composition made of wax and other ingredients.

CE'RATE [ceratum, L.] an external medicine of a middle composition, between an ointment and a plaster, a cere-cloth.

CERA'TED [ceratus, L.] covered with wax.

CERA'TIAS [κερατίας, Gr.] the plant Capers.

CERATINE [ceratinus, L. of κέρας, Gr. a horn] horned, cornuted; also sophistical.

CERATINE Arguments [with Logicians] sophistical, subtle or intricate arguments, as what a man has not lost he has; but he has not lost horns, ergo he has horns.

CERA'TION [with Chymists] the rendering of a substance fit to be melted or dissolved.

CERATITES [with Botanists] the horned Poppy.

CERATOIDES tunica [with Anatomists] the horny coat of the eye.

CERATOGLO'SSUM [of κέρας an horn and γλῶσσα the tongue, Gr.] the proper pair of muscles which belong to the tongue, proceeding from the horns of the bone call'd Hyoides, and are join'd to the sides of the tongue.

CERA'TIUM [with Botanists] the tree Caract or Carob, or the Fruit of it, L.

CERATONI'A [with Botanists] the Carob-tree, or Bean-tree, L.

CERA'TUM [with Surgeons] a cerate or cere-cloth.

CERA'TURE [ceratura, L.] a dressing.

CERAU'NIAS [κεραύνιον, Gr.] the thunder-stone.

CERAU'NIUM [κεραύνιον, Gr.] a kind of puff or must-room, so call'd, because it grows plentifully after thunder, L.

CERAUNOCHRY'SOS [of κεραυνός thunder, and χρυσός Gr. gold] a sort of chymical powder.

CE'RBERUS. The poets tell us that Cerberus was a dog that had three heads. It is plain, that he was of the city called Tricarenus, as well as Geryon. They also tell us, that Hercules dragged this dog out of hell. Geryon had great dogs to keep his cattle, one of which was Cerberus, the other Orus. Hercules had slain Orus in the city of Tricaria, [i. e. three heads] before he drove away the oxen. One Molossus, a Mycenean, would have begg'd this of Eurybatus; but he refusing to let him have him, he prevails upon the herdsmen; they shut up the dog in a cave in Laconica near Tarnarus, and put to him some bitches in order for a breed. Eurybatus sends Hercules to find out this dog, and he having wander'd over all Peloponnese, at last found out the cave, where the dog was hid, and going down into the cave, brought out the dog; and thence they gave it out, that Hercules

Hercules went down into hell through the cave, and brought the dog from thence. Palaphatus.

CERES, according to the poets, was the daughter of Saturn and Ops, whose daughter Pluto having stolen, she, desirous to find her, lighted two torches at Mount Ætna, resolving to seek her night and day throughout all the earth.

Ovid says, that Ceres was the first that tilled the ground, and furnished mankind with corn for food, and by laws taught them justice, and the manner of living in society, which before they were strangers to.

Ceres and Vesta. They seem to be no other than the earth itself; for the ancients call'd her Ἑστία, i. e. Vesta, διὰ τὸ ἑστῆναι, i. e. because it stands; or because the universal world leans and bears upon it, as on a certain foundation.

And in as much as she is said to produce corn, she very properly bears a garland, heavy with ears of corn.

Triptolemus, of Eleusina, is storied to have sown bread-corn all over the orb of the earth, at the time he was carried in Ceres's chariot, which was drawn by flying dragons: for this man was the first of the ancients that took a survey of all things; and God having endowed him with a large share of knowledge, he came at last to understand how barley was to be managed, how separated from the chaff and to be beaten or ground.

Eleusis was a place where the use of barley was first found out, and Ceres taking her name from the place, was called Eleusina.

Pluto is said to have stolen away Proserpina, the daughter of Ceres. The foundation of this fiction is, that the seeds of bread-corn are for some time hid in the earth. In the spring time they sacrifice to her a turf and the grass, with much mirth and rejoicing, seeing all things to grow green, and to afford great hopes of fertility. Hence Pluto, i. e. Riches, is supposed to be the son of Ceres.

And they very properly offer to Ceres sows with pig, on account of the fertility of the earth, the easy conception and perfect maturity.

CHANCE, hazard or fortune; a term we apply to events, to denote that they happen without any necessary cause, F.

CHANCE [in Metaphysics] many things happen by chance in the world, with regard to second causes; but nothing at all happens by chance in respect to the first cause (God) who disposes and pre-ordains all things from all eternity. For chance and fortune are only to be said properly, in respect to him that is ignorant of the intention of the director. And inasmuch as the divine intention is hid from man till the thing is done; therefore the same, with respect to man, is said to happen by chance; but not in respect to the first cause.

CHANCE, is also used for the manner of deciding things, the conduct or direction whereof is left at large, and not reducible to any determinate rules or measures, or where there is no ground or pretence, as at cards, dice, &c.

One of these was painted with her back towards us, and her face forward as proceeding from us; and the other two with their faces towards us, to denote that for one benefit done we should receive double thanks; they were painted naked, to intimate that good offices should be done without dissembling and hypocrisy; they were represented young, to signify that the remembrance of benefits should never wax old; and also laughing, to signify that we should do good to others with cheerfulness and alacrity. They are represented linked together arm in arm to instruct us that one kindness should provoke another, so that the knot and bond of love should be indissoluble. The poets tell us, that they used to wash themselves in the fountain Acidalius, because benefits, gifts and good turns, ought to be sincere and pure, and not base, sordid and counterfeit.

CHA'RNEL-house [of caro, flesh, L. whence charnier, F.] a place where the skulls and bones of the dead are laid up.

CHA'RON [according to the Poets] was the son of Erebus and the night; and the ferry-man of Pluto, to convey the souls of the deceased to him.

Charon is storied to be covetous of money, and therefore would carry none over without a piece of silver, which the ghosts were wont to carry between their lips. And altho' it was not granted, that any who were not dead or unburied, should be admitted into Charon's boat; yet Aeneas, for his piety, and Hercules and Theseus by their valour, and Orpheus by his musick, obtained the privilege to pass to and fro in it.

The original of this fable is supposed to be this; Osiris, king of Egypt, was one who took extraordinary care of the dead, causing them to be buried in several places, made on purpose near Memphis, to encourage virtue and a good life; for persons were appointed to enquire into every man's man's actions; and if the deceased had not lived well, he was to be cast into a place of shame and punishment; but if he had liv'd virtuously, he was to be interr'd in pleasant fields, beautified and flourishing with all manner of flowers. And by this means Osiris did awe his subjects into a submission and obedience to his laws.

This place was near the city Memphis in Egypt, and encompassed several times with the river Nile: Hence the poets take their four rivers of hell, Acheron, Styx, Cocytus and Phlegethon.

An old fellow used to convey the dead bodies over these four compassings of the Nile; and hence comes the poets Charon.

The heathens did believe that Charon would never suffer the souls whose bodies had lain long unburied, to pass in his boat to rest in the Elysian Fields; but that they were tossed up and down during the space of 100 years, upon the banks of the river Acheron.

Therefore it was looked upon a cruelty beyond expression, to deny burial to the dead; and therefore all great commanders were very careful after a battle to inter the bodies of their soldiers that had been slain.

CLOUDS [whence they take their name is not certainly determined; Somnerus derives them of clud, Sax. a lump or clod, q. d. clodded vapours; but Minsbew of claudere, L. to shut up, because they shut up the sun from us.] It is a question among philosophers, whether clouds or thick fogs are compound alike, or whether there is something more in the clouds than there is in the thick fogs: Some are of opinion, that the clouds are grosser than all fogs, and that they are composed of flakes of snow, rather than particles of water, such as fogs are made of. Others again are of opinion, that the clouds are only a closer sort of fogs. And indeed those fogs that hang upon the tops of very high hills, appear to people that are on plains to be all one with the clouds; tho' those that are at them perceive nothing but a thick fog. Clouds then are formed of vapours raised from water or moisture, or those exhalations that ascend from the earth, and are no other than small bubbles detach'd from the waters by the power of the solar or subterraneous heat, or both. And being lighter than the atmosphere, are buoy'd up thereby till they become of an equal weight therewith in some of its regions aloft in the air, or nearer to the earth.

The clouds then are higher than fogs, and hang in the air, and are carried about in it by the winds. They are also of various figures; sometimes so thin, that the sun's rays pass through them; they also appear of several colours, as white, red, &c. and also sometimes of very dark colours.

As to their hanging in the air, it seems a matter of some difficulty to account for that; because all watery particles, of which clouds consist, are heavier than air, so that were there nothing to hinder, they would fall to the earth. But there are two things that are supposed to bear them up. The first is the winds, which blow from all parts under the region of the clouds, and do with them bear about many lighter sorts of bodies; especially if those bodies contain but a small quantity of solid matter under a broad superficies. Thus it is commonly seen how easily boys paper-kites are kept up by the wind when they are mounted pretty high, and in like manner the particles of water very much rarefied may easily be suspended at that height. 2dly, There are new exhalations and vapours perpetually fuming out of the earth, and by their motion upwards hinder the clouds from falling or descending, unless the density of the clouds preponderates. And so we see, that the vapour of the fire carries lighter bodies up the chimney; nay, the smoke of a fire in a chimney is able to turn a thin plate of iron, that is artfully placed in it, so strongly, as to turn about a spit and roast a piece of meat of a considerable weight.

As to the colours of the clouds they are varied according to the situation of the sun, and way of reflecting its light in respect to us. The density of the clouds proceeds from the closeness of the vaporous particles one to another, and their thinness from the distance of those particles one from another, of which there are several causes. When they are very thin, they leave so many interstices, that the rays of the sun dart thro' them in many places, but are intercepted in others.

As to the figures or forms of the clouds, all their variety arises from their plenty of vapours, and the influence of the sun and wind. For it is impossible for them to be variously condensed, rarefied and carried about in the air, and their figures not to be changed.

Clouds are suspended in the air, because they consist of water rarefied by the heat of the sun into steam, which steam being lighter than air is carried up by it into the colder regions, where it is again condensed into water, and from that into ice and snow, which becoming too heavy for the air to support, breaks into pieces, and descends by their superior weight.

And clouds swim in the air as ships at sea; for the air being thicker near the earth, and the particles of a cloud but thin, they are easily born up; but, according to the greater or lesser weight of a cloud, and the setting of the wind, it sinks or rises.

When the particles of the clouds are so thick that they can no longer be kept up by the resistance of the air, then are they condensed into water and fall down in rain. See Condensation and Vapour.

CLOUDS-BERRY, a plant growing on Pendle-hill in Lancashire, so called as if it came out of the clouds.

CLOUDY, overcast with clouds; also looking morosely.

CLOVE [cluxe, Sax.] a head or partition of a head of garlick, lilly-roots, &c.

CLOVES [cluxe, Sax.] a spice, the fruit of an East Indian tree.

CLUMPERTON, a clown, or clownish fellow.

CLUMPS [probably of clomp, Teut.] a numpskull, one void of common sense.

CLUMSINESS, shortness and thickness.

CLUMSY [lompisch, Du. stupid] short and thick; also awkward, unhandy.

CLUNCH { [at Wednesbury in Staffordshire] a substance which is found next the coal in sinking the coal-pits.

CLUNG [of clungan, Sax.] shrunk up with leanness, half starved, stuck close together; also withered as fruits.

To CLUNG, to dry as wood does, when it is laid up after it is cut.

CLU'NIACK Monks, an order of monks founded in the year 900, by Berne abbot of Cluny in Burgundy.

CLUSH and swollen neck [in Cattle] a distemper, when their neck is swelled and raw.

CLU'STER [clustep, Sax.] a bunch of grapes, figs, &c. also a heap of several things.

CLU'STERING, producing clusters, Milton.

CLU'STERY [of clustepicg, Sax.] in clusters.

CLU'TA [Old Law] clouted shoes, or horse-shoes; also stakes of iron with which cart wheels are shod.

CLUTA'RUM [Old Law] a smithery or forge where such shoes are made.

To CLUTCH [of clingere, L.] to gripe with the fist.

CLU'TCHES, the hands clutched; also safe possession.

CLUTCH fisted, having great clumsy hands.

To CLUTTER [klattern, Du.] to make a noise or rattling or hurly burly.

A CLU'TTER { [clea^{up}, Sax.] a making a noise,

A CLU'TTERING { bustle or stir.

CLY'DON [κλυδων, Gr.] a floating in the stomach.

CLY'MENOS { [κλυμενον, Gr.] water-betony; also soap-

CLY'SMA { [κλυσμος, Gr.] a purgation or washing, a

CLY'SMU { clyster.

CLY'SSUS [with Chymists] one of the effects or productions of that art, consisting of the most efficacious principles of any body extracted, purified, and then remixed.

CLYSSUS, also a long digestion and union of oily spirits (especially mineral ones) in order to make a composition of them; also a medicine made of the most active parts of any ingredient.

CLY'STER [clustere, F. of κλυστη, Gr.] a fluid medicine or decoction to be injected into the bowels by the fundament.

To CLYSTERIZE, to give a clyster.

CLY'TO, a title of honour, anciently given to the son of a king of England.

CNEMODA'CTYLUS [with Anatomists] a muscle, otherwise called Extensor tertii internodii digitorum.

COACH [coche, F.] a large sort of chariot.

COADJU'TRIX, a she-helper with another, L.

To COADJU'VATE [coadjuvatum, L.] to help or assist together.

COADUNA'TION, an uniting or gathering together into one.

COÆTA'NEUS [coetaneus, L.] which lives in the same age with one.

COÆVOUS [coevus, L.] of the same age with another.

COAGMENTATION [in Chymistry] the melting down a matter by casting in certain powders, and afterwards reducing the whole into a concrete or solid.

To COA'GULATE [coagulatum, L.] to turn into curds.

COAGULA'TION, is the condensing or thickening of a fluid matter, without its losing any of the sensible parts, which caus'd its fluidity; as in blood, milk, &c.

COAGULA'TION [with Chymists] is a giving a consistence to liquids, by drawing out some part of them in vapours by the means of fire; or else by mingling liquors of a different nature together.

COAGULUM [with Surgeons] the thick part of the blood, that floats in the serum when it is cold.

To COAKS, to fawn upon, to flatter, to soothe.

COAL [col, Sax. and Teut.] a mineral fuel, a black, sulphureous, inflammable matter.

COAL fire, a heap or pile of fire-wood for sale; so much as will make a load of coals when burnt.

COAL Mouse, a bird.

TO COALE'SCE [coalescere, L.] to grow together, to close together again.

COALE'SCENCE } [with Philosophers] a cleaving or u-COALE'SCENCY } niting together of the small, fine particles of matter that compose any natural body.

COALE'SCENCE [with Surg.] the closing of a wound; the growing together again of any parts, which were before separated.

COALI'TION, a re-union, or growing together of parts before separated.

COA'LTERN [coalternus] reciprocal, mutual, by turns.

COALTERN Fevers, are such as when two come together periodically, the one invades, as the other goes off alternately.

COA'MINGS of the hatches [in a Ship] are the planks or frame which raises the hatches above the decks.

CO'AN [of the island Coos] is often applied to Hippocrates, or any thing that relates to him or his writings, he having been born in it.

COARCTA'TION, a straitening or pressing together, L.

COARCTICULA'TION, a jointing of bones, L.

COAST [coste, F.] a country lying on the sea-shore, the sea-shore.

TO COAST it, to sail along by the sea-coast.

COA'STING, sailing within sight of land, or within soundings between them.

COASTING [with Husbandmen] is the transplanting trees and planting the same side to the south, west, east, &c. which stood that way where it grew before.

COAT [coete, Sax.] a fold for sheep, also a hut for cattle.

COAT [cotta, Ital. cotte, F.] a garment worn commonly uppermost; also the outside of fruit: also a thin covering laid or done over any thing, as a coat of fine mould, &c.

COAT [of coet, Sax. an hut, a cottage, &c.] denotes that the place, to which it is added, was denominated from a cottage, &c. in that place.

COAT of Mail, a piece of armour made in the form of a shirt, and wrought over with many iron rings.

COAT [in a Ship] is pieces of canvas done over with tar, put about the mast at the partners; and also about the pump at the decks, that no water may go down there.

COAT [with Anatomists] a membranous cover of any part of the body, as the coats of the eyes, arteries, veins nerves, &c.

COB, a rich miser; also a foreign coin.

COB [coppe, Sax.] a sea-fowl.

COB, a forced harbour for ships, as the cob of Lime in Dorsetshire.

COB, a foreign corn, the same as a Piaffer.

COBA'LES, a sort of Demons in human shape, who were call'd Satyrs, and said to be attendants of Bacchus. Some relate, that there are at this day many of them in Sarmatia, who hide themselves in Houses, and are ready to do any offices, for the people that entertain them, that are to be expected from the best of servants.

TO COBBLE [prob. of Kobbelen, Du. or Kobler, Dan. and that of copulare, L. to join together] to botch, or to do work bunglingly.

A CO'BBLER [Kobler, Dan. to mend shoes] a mender of old shoes; also a bungling workman.

CO'BBLINGNESS [of Kobler, Dan.] Bunglingness.

COBS, balls or pellets with which fowls are crammed.

CO'BWEB, a web made by spiders, very probably anciently call'd Cobs.

CO'CA } [Old Law] a cogge, or small boat.

CO'QUA }

CO'CACLE [about Shrewsbury] a device for fishing, made of fallow-twigs, split and covered next the water with an ox-hide, in which the fisherman sits, rows with one hand, and manages his net, or any other fishing-tackle, with the other.

CO'CAO Nut } an Indian nut of which chocolate is CA'CAO Nut } made.

COCCI'FEROUS [of coccus, L. a grain or berry, and fero, L. to bear] all such plants or trees that bear berries.

COCCI'GES Os } [in Anatomy] a cartilaginous kind of CO'CCYX } bone joined to the extremity of the Os Sacrum, so named, because in shape it is something like a Cuckow's bill.

CO'COISM, the old, silly tune of a cuckow.

COCH [in Doctors Bill] stands for cochleare, i. e. a spoonful.

COCHINEEL Worm, an insect engender'd in the fruit of a shrub five or six foot high, called Tonna, there are whole plantations in Guatemala and other parts of the Spanish West Indies; on the top of the fruit grows a red flower, which, when mature, falls on the fruit, which opening discovers a cleft two or three inches diameter. The fruit then appears full of little red insects, having wings of a surprizing smallness. The Indians spread a cloth under the tree, and shake it with poles, till the insects are forced to quit their lodging, and fly about the tree; but not being able to do it long, they tumble down dead into the cloth.

COCHINEEL Grain, is a red berry growing in America, found in a fruit, resembling that of the cochineel-tree or tonna, the first shoots produce a yellow flower, the point whereof, when ripe, opens with a cleft of three or four inches. This fruit is full of kernels or grains, which fall on the least agitation, and which the Indians carefully gather up eight or ten of these fruits yield about an ounce of grain.

This berry yields a dye almost as beautiful as that of the insect, and is so like, that a person may easily be deceived in them.

COCHLEA [with Anatomists] the cavity or hollow part of the ear, resembling the shell of a snail.

CO'CLEA [in Mechanicks] a screw, one of the six mechanick powers; it is a strait cylinder furrowed spiral-wise; if the furrowed surface be convex, the screw is said to be male: if concave, it is called a female screw. Where motion is to be generated, the male and female screw are always joined; that is, whenever the screw is to be used as a simple engine or mechanical power, when joined with an axis in Peritrochio, there is no occasion for a female; but in that case it becomes part of a compound engine.

CO'CHLEA [in Architecture] a winding stair-case.

COCHLEA'RIA [with Botanists] the herb spoon-wort or scurvy-grass, L.

COCHLEA'RE, a spoon [in Medicine] a spoonful, L.

COCK [cocce, Sax. kock, Dan. coc, F.] a dunghil fowl of the male kind; also the pin of a sun-dial or gun; also the needle of a balance; also the wrought piece that covers the balance in a watch.

COCK [with Heralds] Guillim says of the cock, that as some account the queen and swallow or wagtail the Lady, so may I term this Knight among birds; being both of noble courage, and always prepared for the battle, having his comb for an helmet, his sharp and hooked bill for a faulcheon to slash and wound his enemy, and as a complete soldier, armed cap-a-pe, he has his legs armed with spurs, giving an example to the valiant soldier to expel danger by fight and not by flight.

The Cock, say others, is the emblem of strife, of quarrels, of haughtiness and of victory, because he rather chooses to die than yield, and therefore he is called the bird of Mars.

The Cock crows when he is conqueror, and gives notice of his conquest. If he be vanquish'd, he shuns the light and society of men.

The ancients dedicated the cock to Apollo, because he gives notice of his approach and of the break of day. They also dedicated him to Mercury, as being the emblem of watchfulness, summoning men to their business by his crowing. The cock is generally placed on the tops of steeples, and called the weather-cock, to intimate to prelates, that they are to watch over their flocks. The Cock is the herald of the day and the centinel of the night, and is born in coat-armour by many families. The Gauls took the cock for their first standard, and wore it on their helmets for a crest.

A COCK [Hieroglyphically] signified a noble disposition of mind, there being no bird of a more generous and undaunted courage at the sight of imminent danger.

COCK-FIGHTING, the original of this sport is said to have been derived from the Athenians, on the following occasion: When Themistocles was marching his army to fight the Persians, he by the way espying two cocks fighting, caused his army to behold them, and made the following speech to them: Behold, these do not fight for their household-gods, for the monuments of their ancestors, nor for glory, nor for liberty, nor safety of their children; but only because the one will not give way to the other. This so encouraged couraged the Grecians, that they fought strenuously and obtained the victory of the Persians; upon which cock-fighting was by a particular law ordained to be annually practised by the Athenians; and hence was the original of this sport in England derived.

COCK-HORSE [of coc, in the language of the Brigantines, high] a high horse.

COCK of Hay [q. d. cop a heap] a large heap of hay.

COCK a hoop [coque-a-hupe, F. i. e. a cock with a cope-crest or comb] standing upon high terms all upon the spur.

COCK on hoop [i. e. the cock or spigot being laid upon the hoop, and the barrel of ale stunn'd, i. e. drank out without intermission] at the height of mirth and jollity.

See Huskanau.

CO'CKATRICE [coquetris, F.] a kind of serpent other-wife called a basilisk.

COCKS-COMB [with Botanists] the herb also called yellow rattle-grass.

COCK-BRAINED, giddy-brained, hair-brained, rash.

COCK-feather [in Archery] that feather of the shaft that stands upright in due notching, and if it be not observed, the other feathers running on the bow will spoil the shot.

COCK-LOFT [probably of coc high, of J], Heb. a roof] an upper loft or garret.

COCK-PIT, a place made for cocks to fight in.

COCK-PIT [in a Ship of War] is a place on the lower floor or deck behind the main capstan, lying between the platform or orlope and the steward's room, where are subdivisions or partitions for the purser, the surgeon and his mates.

COCK-roads, a net for the catching of woodcocks.

COCK-roaches, a sort of insects

COCKS [with Mariners] are small square pieces of brass with holes in them, which are put into the middle of large wooden shivers, to prevent them from splitting and galling by the pin of the block or pulley on which they turn.

COCK Weed [with Botanists] an herb.

COCK-SWAIN ? [of a ship] an officer, who has the COXON S charge of the cock-boat, barge or shallop, with all its furniture, and is in readiness with his crew to man the boat upon all occasions.

COCK-throated Horse [with Farmers] a horse whose thropple or windpipe is so long, that he cannot draw his breath with that ease that others do which are loose-throated.

COCK's Walk [with Cock fighters] a place where a cock is bred, and where commonly no other cock comes.

To CO'CKER, to make much of, to be over-fond of or to dandle

CO'CKET [probably of Cock] brisk, malapert.

COCKET ? a custom-house sealed bill; also a parch-

COKEI S ment sealed and delivered by the officers of the customs to merchants as a warrant that their goods are customed.

COCKET Bread, the finest sort of wheaten bread.

COCKETTATA Lana [Old Law] wooll duly entered at the custom-house, and cocketed or allowed to be exported.

COCKETTUM ? the office at the custom-house where COCKETUM S the goods to be exposed are enter'd.

COCKING Cloth [with Fowlers] a frame made of coarse canvas, about an ell square, tanned, with two sticks set across to keep it out, having a hole to look out at, and to put the nosel of a short gun through, for the shooting of pheasants, &c.]

COCKLE [coccle, Sax.] a weed that grows among corn, otherwise called Cornrose; also a small shell-fish.

COCKLE Stairs, a sort of winding stairs.

To COCKLE, to pucker, shrink or wrinkle, as some cloth does.

CO'CKNEY, a nick-name commonly given to one born and bred in the city of London; some derive it from the tale of a citizen's son who knew not the language of a cock, but called it neigbing; others again of coquin, F. an idle person, citizens generally living a less active life than country people; others again, from cocker or fondle.

COCKREL, a young cock bred for fighting.

CO'CKISH [of cock] uppish.

CO'CKISHNESS, uppishness.

COCO, an Indian tree resembling a date-tree, the nut of which contains a sweet liquor like milk or cream, and of a pleasant taste; the inner rind of which may be eaten like artichokes, and of the outward are made large cables.

CO'CKQUEAN ? [q. Cookquean, of coqua, L. or coquint, GO'CKQUEAN S. F.] a man that cots or acts the part of a cook among women, or concerns himself in kitchen affairs.

CO'COQUET, a beau, a gallant, an amoroso or general lover; also a wanton maiden, who keeps several lovers in suspense, F.

CO'CTIBLE [coctibilis, L.] easy to be boiled.

CO'CTILE [coctilis, L.] sodden or baked.

COCTILLATION, a poaching, as eggs, &c. L.

CO'CTION, a boiling; also a digestion in the stomach, L.

CO'CYLA ? [Old Law] a small drinking cup in the CO'CULUM S shape of a boat.

CO'CULUS Indicus, a poisonous narcotick berry, made use of by poachers to intoxicate fish, so that they may be taken out of the water with the hand; called also Bacca piscatoria, i. e. fishers-berries.

COD [codde, Sax. and Du.] a pillow, as a pin-cod, a pin-cushion.

CODS, the testicles of an animal.

COD WARE, grain or seed contained in cods, as beans, peas, &c.

CO'DDY [coddy, Sax.] having pods or shales, as peas, beans, &c.

CODE [of caudex, L. the trunk of a tree, because anciently their books were made of bark or wood] a book or roll. See Codex.

CODE [of codex a book of caudex the trunk or timber of a tree, because the books of the ancients were made of wood, and their leaves were something like our table books] a volume or book.

CODE [among Lawyers] a certain book or volume of the ancient Roman law. In old time, the pleas and answers of the lawyers were in loose scrolls or sheets of parchment or paper. These the Emperour Justinian having collected and compiled into a book, called it Codex, and ever since, this book by way of eminence has been called the Code, and is accounted the second volume of the Roman civil law, and contains 12 books.

The matter of it, especially as to the first 8 books, is pretty near the same with the Digests; but in these things it differs, first, as to the stile, which is not so pure; 2. Its method is not so accurate as that of the Digest. 3dly, In that it discusses matters of more common use whereas the more abstruse and subtle questions of the law are discuss'd in the Digests, and there are the opinions of the ancient lawyers upon them, and so contains more polite, fine, witty arguing, than of use to the generality of mankind.

And for this reason Justinian compos'd the code, because he found the Digest in many places too fine and subtle for common use, and also very defective and imperfect as not deciding many cases that did daily occur.

This Code was compiled from the answers and determinations of 56 Emperors and their councils, many of which were learned and skilful lawyers, as the famous Papinianus and some others, from the time of the Emperor Adrian to Justinian's own time. And in this Code there are abundance of things fully and distinctly determined which before were either omitted or too briefly handled.

The Theodosian Code, is of good use to explain the other Code, which cannot well be understood without it. This was held in great esteem, and was used in the Western parts of Europe for several hundred years, as Mr. Selden relates, after that law was in a manner disused and forgotten; but now the Theodosian Code is also grown much out of use.

CO'DIA [with Botanists] the top or head of any plant; but more especially that of a poppy.

CO'DICIL [codicillus, L.] a supplement to a will or other writing; especially an addition to a testament, when any thing has been omitted which the testator would have added, explained, altered, or recalled.

CODI'NIAC [Cogniac, F. cydoniatum, L.] Quiddeny or marmalade of quinces.

CO'DLIN [of to coddle] an apple proper to be coddled or boiled.

CODOSCE'LÆ [according to Fallopins] venereal buboes in the groin.

COE [with Miners] a little lodgment they make for themselves under ground as they work lower and lower.

COE'CUM [in Anatomy] the blind gut, the first of the thick intestines, so called because made like a sack, having but one aperture, which serves it for both entrance and exit, L.

COEFFICIENT [coefficientis, L.] that which makes, causes or brings to pass together with another.

COEFFICIENT, of any generating Term [in Fluxions] is the quantity which arises by dividing that term by the generating quantity.

COEFFICIENT [with Algebraists] the known quantity that is multiplied into any of the unknown terms of an equation.

COEFFICIENCY [of coefficientis, L.] the causing or bringing to pass together with another.

COEFFICIENTS [in Algebra] are numbers prefix'd to letters or species into which they are supposed to be multiplied; and therefore with such letters, or with the quantities represented by them, they make a rectangle or product, coefficient production; whence the name, thus 6ab implies that the quantities represented by a b, are multiplied into the coefficient 6. and that out of these 2 the rectangle or product 6ab is formed.

COELIA [κοιλία, Gr.] with Anat. signifies any kind of original cavity in an animal body; and hence diseases seated in the cavities or venters of the body, are called Cœliack affections.

COELIACK [of κοιλία, Gr. the belly] of or belonging to the belly.

COELIAC Artery [with Anat.] is that which arises from the trunk of the Aorta after it enters the Abdomen, and spreads into 2 branches; the first on the right-hand named Gastrica dextra, and the other on the left, called Splenica.

COELIAC Passion, a kind of flux or looseness, wherein the chyle or nutritious part of the food passes off along with, or instead of urine.

COELIAC Vein, that which runs into the intestinum rectum, or blind gut.

COELIGENOUS [Coeligena, L.] heaven born.

COELOMA [κοίλωμα, Gr.] a hollow round ulcer in the tunica cornea, or horny coat of the eye, L.

COELUM Heaven [with Anat.] the cavity of the eye towards the corner, L.

COELUS [according to the Pagan Theology] was the ancientest, the great grandfather (or first) of all the Gods [in the Greek called Ουρανός] he had 2 sons, Titan was the elder, and Saturn the younger; the last of which committed a most impious action, by cutting off his privy parts with a scythe, to deprive him of the power of begetting, and threw his genitals into the sea, where by the continual agitation of the waves, it finding a favourable womb among the froth, they say the goddess Venus was produced out of the bleeding genitals.

Hesiod says, his wife Vesta brought forth many sons and daughters, the names of which were Codrus, Zeus, Theia, Hyperion, Themis, Mnemosyne, Phœbe, Tethys, Saturnus, Gigas, Titan, Brontes, &c. to the number of 45. Of these Apollodorus says, Cœlus married Terra (the earth) and had by her 3 sorts of children, i. e. the giants with an hundred hands and 50 heads, called Briareus, Cyan and Cœus; 2. the Cyclops, and the Titans, of whom Saturn was the youngest.

COE'METERY [κοιμητήριον, Gr.] of a burying place, a church-yard.

COE'MPTION, a buying up of things, L.

COE'NOBITES [of κοινός common, and βίος life] a sect that had all things in common by way of religious conversation.

COMEDIOGRAPHY [of κωμῳδία and γράφω, Gr.] a description or writing the writing of comedies.

COMEDY [of κῶμη a village and ὥδη a song; because comedies were first acted in country villages] is an agreeable representation of the actions of human life. It is reckoned part of the great poetry on account of its end, which is instruction as well as pleasure. For men will sooner be laugh'd out of their follies than beat out of them; and therefore comedy will arrive at the end of dramatick poetry sooner than tragedy. The three unities of action, time and place are requisite in this, and therefore whatever action is compound, whatever time above what is necessary for the representation, whatever scene is removed from one street to another, or one house to another, break the rules or are against nature.

That which distinguishes our comick poetry from all others, and gives it the advantage over both the ancients and moderns, is humour, which Mr. Dryden thus defines.

It is the ridiculous extravagance of conversation wherein one man differs from all others.

Some have fancied that the excellence of comedy consists in the wit of it; others confine it to the intrigue, and turns of incidents; and others to the humours. But indeed the excellence lies in the just mixture of the whole.

COMELINESS, gracefulness, beauteousness.

COMELY [either of become, Engl. neat, or, as Cas. will, of κομῶς, Gr.] handsome, beautiful, graceful.

COMET [in Heraldry] as Guillim says, is not of an orbicular form as other celestial natures are; but protracts its light at length like a beard, or rather dilates it in length like an hairy bush, and thence grows taper-wise like the tail of a fox. That it contracts its matter or substance from a slimy exhalation, and was not originally in the creation; nor is number'd among natural things, mentioned in the history of Genesis; but is something preternatural, and is placed with heavenly bodies, because they seem to be of their kind. Many are of opinion, that they prognosticate dreadful and horrible events of things to come; but others hold that they are as much stars as any other, and only draw nearer to us at the time they appear, and do not forebode any accidents whatsoever. The figure annexed is azure, a comet, or blazing-star streaming in bend Or.

COMETOGRAPHER [of κομήτης and γράφω, Gr. to write] one who writes concerning comets.

COMETOGRAPHY, a description or treatise concerning comets.

COMETS [cometa, L. of κομήτης, Gr. so called because of their figure which seems to be as it were hairy] are an imperfect substance, which consists of a thick fat vapour, that is supposed to be enkindled in the upper region of the air; they seem hairy or to shed hairs, especially on that side which is opposite to the sun, but after a various manner: some drag a tail after them, and are called Crinita; others have a long beard, and are called Barbata; others appear something in the shape of a rose, having those hairs scattered round them; others are in the shape of a sword, and are called ensiformes. Comets compass the whole earth in the space of 24 hours, and are never of very long appearance. The comet of the longest continuance that ever was in the world, was in the time of Nero, which was visible for six months.

CONDY'LUS [κονδύλος, Gr.] a joint, a little round eminence, or protuberance at the extremity of a bone.

CONE [conus, L. of κων, Gr.] a geometrical solid figure, consisting of straight lines that arise from a circular base, and growing narrower by degrees, end in a point at the top, directly over the center of the base. The manner of producing this figure may be imagined by the turning the plane of a right lined triangle, round the perpendicular leg or Axis, so that if the leg be equal to the base, the solid produced will be a right Cone; if it be less, it will be an acute-angled Cone; and if greater, an obtuse-angled Cone; as in the figure.

Right CONE [with Geo.] a cone is said so to be, with respect to the position of its Axis, i. e. when it is not perpendicular to the horizon, it is called an oblique cone.

A Scalenous CONE, is when one side of it is longer than the other, as in the figure.

CONE of Rays [in Opticks] are all those rays which fall from any point, as suppose A in any object on the surface of any glass, as B, C, D, having the vertex in A, and the glass for its base, such is the cone B, C, D, A.

CONE [with Botanists] signifies not only such dry, squamous fruits as are properly of a conick figure, as the fir and pine-fruits; but also any fruit composed of several parts of a lignous substance, adhering together, and separating when ripe, as the cypress.

CONE { Cone, Sax. } [an account or reckoning when COLNE { Colne, Sax. } a young woman, at the age of 14 or 15, is in law accounted to be of a competent age to keep Cone and key of the house, i. e. to take upon her the management of household affairs.

To CONFABULATE [confabulatum, L.] to tell stories, to talk together.

CONFABULA'TION, a familiar talking or discoursing together, L.

CONFABULATORY [of confabulare, L.] pertaining to talking together.

CONFALON, a confraternity of seculars in the church of Rome, called penitents.

CONFECTIO [in Pharmacy] a kind of compound remedy of the consistence of an electuary.

CONFARREA'TION, a ceremony among the ancient Romans, used in the marriage of a person, whose children were destined to the honours of the priesthood.

CONFECTIO, see Confects.

CONFECTIONER [Confiturier, F.] a maker or seller of sweet-meats.

CO'NFE'CTS [confitures, F.] fruits, flowers, roots, &c. boiled and prepared with sugar, &c.

CONFEDERACY } [confœderatio, L.] an alliance
CONFEDERA'TION } between princes and states, for their mutual defence against a common enemy.

CONFEDERACY [in Law] the uniting of persons to do any unlawful act.

To CONFEDERATE [confœderatum, L. confederer, F.] to unite in a confederacy, to combine, to plot together.

CO'NFEDERATES [confœderati, L.] allies, princes or states entered into an alliance for their common safety.

To CONFER [conferre, L.] to give or bestow; also to compare; also to discourse or talk together.

CO'NFERENCE, a discourse held between several persons about a particular affair, a parley.

CONFERVA, the herb spurge of the river, L.

To CONFESS [confessum, L.] to acknowledge or own; also to declare one's sins in order to absolution.

CONFESSIO, acknowledgement, declaration, F. of L.

Auricular CONFESSIO, a confession of sins to a priest.

CONFESSIO [with Rhetoricians] is a figure by which the person acknowledges his fault, to engage him, whom he addresses to pardon him.

CONFESSIO of Offence [in Common Law] an ancient practice of a felon's making a confession before a coroner in a church or other privileged place; upon which the offender was by the law obliged to abjure the realm.

CONFESSIONARY [confessional, Fr.] the confession-chair or seat, in which a priest sits to hear confessions.

A Father CONFESSOR, a popish priest, who has the power to hear confessions of penitents, and to give them absolution.

CONFESSORS, those christians who have adhered to the faith, notwithstanding cruel persecutions and sufferings on that account.

CONFICIENT [conficiens, L.] which finisheth, procureth, or worketh with.

To CONFIDE [confidere, L.] to trust in, or rely upon.

CO'NFIDENCE [confidentia, L.] boldness, assurance, presumption.

CO'NFIDENT [confidens, L.] bold, daring, presumptuous, positive.

A CO'NFIDENT, an intimate, trusty, bosom friend, used in matters of secrecy and trust.

Co'NFIDENTNESS [confidentia, L.] confidence.

CONFIGURATION, a forming, fashioning, or making of a like figure; also the exterior surface that bounds, bodies, and gives them their particular figure.

CONFIGURATION [with Astrologers] the conjunction or mutual aspect of planers.

To CONFINE [confiner, F. of con and finire, L. to limit] to tie to a certain place, to imprison, to restrain; also to border upon, to abut upon.

CONFINEMENT, restraint, imprisonment, slavery.

Co'NFINES [confinia, L.] the limits or borders of a field, county, or country; frontiers.

CONFINITY [confinitas, L.] nearness of place.

To CONFIRM [confirmare, L. confirmar, F.] to strengthen, or establish; also to ascertain or make good; also to back with new proofs or reasons; also to administer the church-rite of confirmation.

CONFIRMATION, the act of confirming, strengthening, making good, &c. L.

CONFIRMATION [with Ecclesiasticks] a holy rite or ceremony by which baptized persons are confirm'd in the state of grace, by the laying on of hands.

CONFIRMATION [with Rhetoricians] is the third part of an oration, wherein the orator undertakes to prove by reasons, authorities, laws, &c. the truth of the proposition advanced in his oration.

CONFIRMATION [in Law] a conveyance of an estate or right, by which a voidable is made sure or unavoidable, or whereby a particular estate may be encreased.

CONFIRMATORY, ratifying or confirming.

To CONFISCATE [confiscatum, L.] to seize upon, or take away goods, as forfeited to the king's exchequer, or to the publick treasury.

CONFISCATE [confiscatus, L. because among the Romans the emperor's treasure was kept in baskets, call'd Fisci] forfeited to the publick treasury.

CONFISCATION a forfeiting of, or a legal adjudication, or taking the forfeitures of goods, &c. to the fisc or treasury, or the king's use, L.

CONFLAGRANT [confl grans, L.] burning or being in a blaze together, Milton.

CONFLAGRATION, a general burning or consuming of houses by fire, F. of L.

CONFLATILE [conflatilis, L.] cast or molten.

CONFLATION, a casting or melting of metal, L.

CONFLEXURE [conflexura, L.] a bending together.

To CONFLICT [conflictare, L.] to encounter or fight with, to struggle with.

A CONFLICT [conflictus, L.] a skirmish or combat; a dispute, a bickering.

CONFLICTING, struggling, engaging, fighting with, Milton.

Co'NFLUENCE [confluentia, L.] a concourse or resort of people; also the meeting of two rivers, or the place where they meet and mingle their waters.

Co'NFLUENT } confluens, L. } flowing or running to-Co'NFLUOUS } confluus, L. } gether, as waters.

CONFLUENT Small Pox, i. e. one wherein the pustules run into one another.

Co'NFLUX [confluxio, L.] a flowing or running together, as of humours, also the place where 2 rivers join together, and mix their waters.

CONFLUXIBILITY } an aptness to flow together.

CONFLUIBILITY }

To CONFO'RM [conformare, L. conformer, F.] to make like to, to frame, fashion, or suit to, to comply with.

Co'NFORM [conformis, L.] agreeable, conformable to.

CONFO'RMABLE, agreeable, suitable, of the like nature, form or fashion.

CONFO'RMABLENESS } [of conformité, F. conformitas,

CONFO'RMNESS } L.] agreeableness in form.

CONFORMATIO Membrorum [with Rhetoricians] is when things, to which nature has deny'd speech, are brought in speaking, L.

CONFORMATION, the shaping, fashioning, or ordering of a thing, also the particular texture and consistence of the parts of a body, and their disposition to make a whole.

CONFORMATION [in the Art of Physick] an essential property of health or sickness.

CONFORMATION [with Anatomists] denotes the figure and disposition of the parts of the body of a man: hence male formation, a fault in the first rudiments, whereby a person comes into the world crooked, or with some of the viscera, &c. not duly proportion'd; or when persons labour under incurable Asthma's, from too small a capacity of the Thorax, or the like.

CONFO'RMIST; one who conforms, especially to the discipline of the establish'd church of England.

CONFO'RMITY [in the Schools] is the congruency, relation or agreement between one thing and another, as between the measure of the thing, and the thing measured, &c.

CONFORTATIVA [i. e. strengthening things] medicines that comfort and strengthen the heart, L.

To CONFOU'ND [confundere, L. confondre, F.] to mingle, jumble, or huddle together; also to confute, puzzle, or perplex; also to abash or put out of countenance; also to dismay, or make afraid.

CONFOU'NDED [confondu, F.] put into confusion, &c.

CONFOU'NDEDNESS, confusedness, the being in confusion.

CONFOU'NDEDLY, horribly, after a terrible manner.

CONFRAI'RY [q. confratria, L.] a fraternity, brotherhood, or society united together, especially upon a religious account.

CONFRE'RES [Old Statutes] brothers in a religious house; fellows of one society, F.

CONFRA'TRICES } lustful women, who titulate one

CONFRI'CTRICES } another in the Clitoris, in imitation of venereal intercourses with men.

To CONFRO'NT [confronter, F. of con and frons, L.] to bring face to face, to oppose, to compare face to face.

CONFRONTATION, the action of setting two people in opposition to each other, to discover the truth of some fact which they relate differently.

CONFUS'Æ febres [with Physicians] such fevers as come together alternately in the same persons, but keep not their periods and alterations so exactly as to be easily distinguish'd from one another.

To CONFUS'E [confusum, Sup. of confundere, L.] to mingle, perplex, or put out of order.

CONFUS'EDNESS [confusion, F. of L.] a being in confusion.

CONFUS'ION, a jumbling together; disorder, hurly-burly, or disturbance; also a being abashed or out of countenance, L.

CONFUSION [in a Metaphysical sense] is opposed to order, in a perturbation of which confusion consists, ex. gr. when things prior in nature do not precede, or posterior do not follow.

CONFUSION [with Chymists] a mixture of liquors or fluid things.

CONFUSION [with Logicians] is opposed to distinctness or perspicuity.

CONFUSION [in a Physical sense] is a sort of union or mixture by mere contiguity, as that between fluids of a contrary nature, as oil, vinegar, &c.

CONFUTATIO [with Rhetor.] a part of a narration, wherein the orator seconds his own arguments, and strengthens his cause by refelling and destroying the opposite arguments of his antagonist.

To CONFUTE [confutare, L.] to convince in reasoning; to disprove, to answer objections, to overthrow or baffle.

CONG [in Physicians Bills is set for congius, L.] a gallon.

CONGE, licence, permission, leave, F.

Co'NGE [with Architects] a moulding either in form of a quarter round or of a cavetto, which serves to separate two members from one another.

CONGE' d'accorder, leave to accord or agree, F.

CONGE' d'eslire [Common Law] is the royal permission to a dean or chapter in a time of vacation to choose a bishop, &c.

CONGES [with Architects] the rings or ferrels anciently used about the ends of wooden pillars to keep them from splitting, and afterwards imitated in stone-work.

CONGEA'BLE [of congé, F.] done with leave.

To CONGEA'L [congelare, L.] to freeze or be frozen, to thicken or grow thick, as ice does.

To CONGEAL [with Chymists] is to let some matter that is melted fix or grow into a consistence, as when metal is suffered to cool after it has been melted in a crucible, &c.

CONGEA'LABLE, that may be congealed.

CONGE, a low bow or reverence.

CONGELA'TION, a congealing or freezing; a thickening or settling, L.

CONGE'NEROUS [congener, L.] of the same kind or sort.

CONGENEROUS Muscles [with Anatomists] such as serve together to produce the same motion.

CONGE'NEROUSNESS [of congener, L.] the being of the same kind.

CONGENERATED [congeneratus, L.] begotten together.

CONGENIAL [of con and genialis, L.] that is of the same stock or kind.

CONGENIALITY } the likeness of one kind to CONGENIALNESS } or with another.

CONGENITURE [congenitura, L.] the birth of things at the same time.

CONGEON, a person of low stature, a dwarf.

CONGER [conger or congrus, L.] a great kind of eel.

CONGER } [of congrus, L.] a society of booksellers to CONGRES } the number of 10 or more, who unite into a sort of company, or contribute a joint stock for the printing of books; so called, because as a large conger eel is said to devour the small fry, so this united body overpowers young and single traders, who have neither so much money to support the charge, nor so united an interest to dispose of books printed; tho' (according to tradition) the foregoing was the original of the name conger, yet to be a little more complaisant, you may derive it of congruere, L. i. e. to agree together; or, si licet in parvis magnis exemplis uti, of congressus a congress. Utrum horum magis accipe.

CONGERIES, a heap, a pile, a hoard.

CONGERIES [in Natural Philosophy] a collection or joining together of many bodies or particles into one mass or lump.

TO CONGEST [congestum, L.] to heap up or gather together.

CONGESTIBLE [of congestio, L.] that may be heaped up or gotten together.

CONGESTION, a heaping or gathering together, F. of L.

CONGESTION [with Surgeons] a settling of humours in any part of the body, which produces a tumour or swelling by little and little, and almost insensibly, by reason of the slow progress and thickness of the matter.

CONGIUS, a Roman measure containing about a gallon.

CONGLOBATED } [conglobatus, L.] heaped or ga-

CONGLOBED } thered round together.

CONGLOBATED Glands [in Anatomy] such glands in an animal body, as are smooth in their surface, and seem to be made up of one continued substance, as those of the mesentery are, and all those which serve to separate the juice called Lympha from the arterious blood, and to return it by proper channels.

CONGLOBATELY [of conglobatio, L.] in a round mass or lump, &c.

TO CONGLOMERATE [conglomeratum, L.] to wind up or into a bottom, to heap upon one.

CONGLOMERATE } [conglomeratus, L.] heaped or

CONGLOMERATED } wound round together.

CONGLOMERATEL Glands [in Surgery] are such as are uneven in their surface, and made up as it were of lesser glands or kernels; the use of which is to separate several sorts of juices from the blood; and also to work and alter them, and to convey them by proper channels to their peculiar receptacles.

TO CONGLUTINATE [conglutinatum, L.] to glue, knit or join together.

CONGLUTINATION, a gluing together, &c. L.

CONGLUTINATION [with Physicians] a joining of bodies by means of their oily, sticky and clammy parts.

TO CONGRATULATE [congratulum, L.] to rejoice with one on account of his good fortune; also to bid him joy; also to express joy on his account.

CONGRATULANT [congratulus, L.] congratulating, Milton.

CONGRATULATION, a congratulating, &c. F. of L.

CONGRATULATORY [of congratulator, L.] of congratulation.

CONGRE [of conger, L.] a large eel or snake that eats up the smaller fry.

TO CONGREGATE [congregatum, L.] to assemble or gather together.

CONGREGATION, an assembly or gathering together; a society or company of people meeting, more especially for divine service.

CONGREGATION [with some Philosophers] the least degree of mixture in which the parts of the mix'd body are inconsistent, or do not adhere to or touch each other but in a point; which properly, they say, is peculiar to the particles of water, and all other fluids.

CONGREGATIONAL, of or pertaining to a congregation.

CONGREGATIONALISTS, a sect of Independents, between Presbyterians and Brownists.

CONGRESS [congressus, L.] a coming together; meeting or rencounter; also an encountering.

CONGRESS, an assembly or the meeting together of the deputies or plenipotentiaries of several princes to treat about a peace or any other affair of importance.

CONGRESS [congressus, L.] an essay or trial made by appointment of a judge in the presence of surgeons and matrons, to prove whether a man be impotent or not, in order to dissolve a marriage.

CONGRUENCE } [congruentia, L.] agreeableness; CONGRUITY } [congruitas, L.] conformity;
suitableness; it is properly said of a theme or discourse in which there is no fault committed contrary to the rules of grammar.

CONGRUENT [congruens, L.] agreeable, suitable.

CONGRUITY [in Natural Philosophy] is taken to be a relative property of a fluid body, by which any part of it is readily united with any other part, either of it self or of any other similar fluid. And on the contrary, Incongruity is a property by which it is hinder'd from uniting with any solid or fluid body that is dissimilar to it.

CONGRUITY [with Schoolmen] is a suitableness or relation between things whereby we come to a knowledge of what is to come to pass therein.

CONGRUITY [with Geometricians] is a term apply'd to figures, lines, &c. which exactly correspond when laid over one another, as having the same terms or bounds.

CONGRUOUS [congruus, L.] convenient, meet, proper.

CONGRUOUSNESS [congruité, F. congruitas, L.] agreeableness, &c.

CONIC } [conicus, L.] of or pertaining to the figure

CONICAL } of a cone.

CONIC Section, is a figure which is made by the solidity of a cone, being supposed to be cut by a plane.

If the section be made by the axis, or through the Vertex, the figure arising is a Triangle. If the section be made by a plain parallel to the base of the cone, or successively posited, the figure produced is a Circle.

If the section be made parallel to one side of the cone, it will be an Ellipse.

If the section be made through one side of the cone, through the base, and not parallel to the other side of the cone, it will be an Hyperbola.

CONICALNESS [of conicus, L.] the being in form of a cone.

CONJECTURAL [conjecturalis, L.] belonging to or made up of conjectures; that is only grounded upon appearances, or probable arguments.

TO CONJECTURE [conjecturer, F. of conjectura, L.] to judge or guess at random, without any demonstration.

A CONJECTURE [conjectura, L.] a guess, a probable opinion or supposition.

CONIFEROUS [conifer, L.] bearing cones.

CONIFEROUS Plants [with Botanists] trees, shrubs or plants, that bear a scaly fruit of a woody substance, and a kind of conical figure, containing many seeds, which being ripe drop out of the several cells or partitions of the cone, that then gape or open for that purpose; as the pine, the common alder, the Scotch fir, &c.

CONIFERUS, a, um [in Botanick Writers] coniferous, i. e. which bears its seeds inclosed in a hard scaly fruit, of a conical figure, that is broader at the bottom, and narrower at the top, as the pine-tree, the fir-tree, the alder-tree, &c. L.

CONINGERIA [Old Records] a coney-borough or warren for rabbits, L.

TO CONJOBBLE, to chat together.

TO CONJOIN [conjungere, L. conjoindre, F.] to join or put together.

CONJOINT [conjunctus, L.] joined together, mutual, F.

CONJOINT Degrees [in Musick] are two notes which immediately follow each other in the order of the scale, as Ut and Re.

CONJOINT Tetrachords [in Musick] are two tetrachords, where the same chord is the highest of the one, and the lowest of the other.

CONJOINTLY [of conjunct, F. conjuncte, L.] unitedly.

CONJUGAL [conjugal, L.] of or belonging to a married couple.

CONJUGALLY [of conjugal, F. of con with and jugum a yoke, L.] after the manner of man and wife.

CONJUGATED [conjugatus, L.] coupled or yoked together.

CONJUGATUS, a, um [in Botanick Writers] growing by pairs, L.

Co'NJUGATE Diameter [in Geometry] is the shortest axis or diameter in an Ellipsis or oval figure.

CONJUGATE of an Hyperbola, is a line drawn parallel to the ordinates, and through the center or middle point of the transverse axis; which is sometimes called the second axis or diameter.

To Co'NJUGATE a Verb [with Gram.] is to form or vary it through its several moods, tenses and persons.

Co'NJUGATES [with Logicians] is when from one word we argue to another of the same origination, as if weeping is to sorrow, then to weep is to sorrow.

CONJUGATES [with Rhetoricians] those things that are derived from the same original, as greatness, great, greatly.

CONJUGA'TION, a yoking, a coupling together in pairs.

CONJUGATION [with Anat.] is understood of a pair of nerves, or two nerves arising together and serving for the same operation, sensation or motion, L.

CONJU'NCTION [with Grammarians] a particle or little word, that serves to join other words or sentences together, as and, but, if, CONJUNCTION [in Astronomy] the concurrence or coition of two stars or planets in the same optical point of the heavens.

CONJUNCTION apparent [in Astronomy] is when the right line is supposed to be drawn through the centers of the two planets, does not pass through the center of the earth.

CONJUNCTION real or true [Astron.] is when the right line being prolonged or lengthened, passes also through the earth's center.

CONJUNCTI Morbi [in Medicine] two diseases which come together, and are distinguished into connexi and consequentes, the former subsisting at the same time, and the latter following one another.

CONJUNCTIVA Tunica, L. [Anatomy] the first coat or membrane of the eye, so named because it incloses all the rest, or because it fastens the eye in its orbit.

CONJU'NCTIVE [conjunctivus, L.] joining, uniting.

CONJU'NCTIVENESS, the being of a joining quality.

CONJU'NCTNESS [of conjunction, F. of L.] the being close joined.

CONJU'NCTURE [conjunctura, L.] the state or circumstances of affairs.

CONJURA'TION, a plot or conspiracy, secret cabal or league to do any publick harm, as to subvert the government, attempt the life of the prince, &c.

CONJURA'TION [in Common Law] is in a more especial manner taken to intend a personal conference with the devil or evil spirits, either to compass some design, or to attain the knowledge of some secret; magick words, characters or ceremonies, whereby evil spirits, tempests, &c. are supposed to be rais'd and driven away.

To CONJU'RE [conjurare, L.] to charge upon the sacredness of an oath; to desire earnestly, to intreat with the greatest importunity; also to conspire or plot together.

To Co'NJURE [conjurer, F. of L.] to practise conjuration, or the raising, &c. of spirits.

To CONN [of connan, Sax. to know] to get or learn without book; also to give, as I conn you thanks; also to strike with the fist.

A CONN, a blow with the fist clutched.

CONNA'SCENCE } [of con and nascens, L.] the being CONNA'SCENCY } born together with another.

CONNA'TE [connatus, L.] born together with a person.

CONNA'TURAL [of con and naturalis, L.] that is natural to several things with others.

CONNATURA'LITY } a being of the same nature

CONNA'TURALNESS } with some other.

To CONN'E'CT [connectere, L.] to join, knit, tie, or fasten together.

CONN'E'X [with Logicians] those things are said to be connex, that are joined one to another without any dependence or sequence.

CONN'E'XION, a joining things together, a dependency of one thing upon another, F. of L.

CONN'E'XITY, that by which one thing is joined to another.

CONNI'VANCE } [conniventia, L.] a feigning not to CONVI'VENCE } see, a winking at a fault, a passing it by without punishment.

To CONNI'VE [connivere, L.] to wink at, to take no notice of.

CONNIVE'NTES glandule or valvule [in Anatomy] are wrinkles or corrugations in the inner coat or membrane of the two large interstices the jejunum and ilium.

CONNOISEU'R [of connoître, F. to know] a person well skilled in any thing.

To CONNO'TE, to make known together, L.

A CONNOTA'TION, a making two things or persons known from others by the same distinction, L.

CONNU'BIAL [connubialis, L.] belonging to wedlock.

CONNU'TIOUS [in Natural Philosophy] is that which becomes habitual to a person from his particular nourishment, or what breaks out into a disease in process of time, which gradually had its first aliments from sucking a dis-tempered nurse, &c.

CONOI'D [with Geomet.] a solid body resembling a cone, excepting that instead of a perfect circle, it has for its base an ellipsis or some other curve approaching thereto; or it is a solid produced by the circumvolution or turning of any section of a cone about its axis.

Co'NOID Elliptical [in Geometry] is a solid figure, made from the plain of a semi-ellipsis turned about one of its axes.

CONOID Parabolical [in Geometry] is a solid made by the turning of a parabola about its axis.

CONOIDES [with Anatomists] a particular gland or kernel in the brain, the same with Conarium or Glandula pinealis.

To CONQUA'DRATE [conquadratum, L.] to bring into a square.

CONQUASSA'TION, a shaking as in an earthquake; a dashing or breaking to pieces, L.

CONQUASSA'TION [in Pharmacy] the pounding of things in a mortar.

To CON'QUER [conquerir, F.] to bring under, to gain or get by force of arms; also to master, to gain or win people's hearts or affections.

Co'NQUERABLE [of conquerant, F.] that may be conquered.

Co'NQUEROR, one who has conquered or obtained the victory, a subduer.

Co'NQUEST [conquête, F.] victory; also the thing conquered.

CONREA'TA pellis [probably of corroyeur, F. a currier] a hide or skin drest, Old Law.

CONSANGUI'NITY [consanguinitas, L.] the relation or kinship between persons of the same blood, or issued from the same root.

CONSANGUI'NOUS [of consanguineus, L.] a-kin by blood.

Co'NSCIENCE [scientia, L.] a secret testimony or judgment of the soul, whereby it gives approbation to things it does that are naturally good, and reproaches it self for those that are evil.

CONSCIE'NTIOUS [scientieux, F.] that has a good conscience, just and upright in dealing.

CONSCIE'NTIOUSNESS [of scientieux, F.] the having a good conscience.

Co'NSCIONABLE, conscientious; also equitable, reasonable.

Co'NSCIONABLENESS [of scientia, L.] knowing within one's self.

Co'NSCIOUS [sciens, L.] inwardly guilty, that knows himself to be guilty of or privy to.

CONSCRI'BED [in Geom.] is the same as circumscribed.

CONSCRIPTION, an inrolling or registering, L.

To Co'NSECRATE [consecratum, L.] to dedicate, to devote, to hallow; also to canonise.

CONSECRA'TION, a hallowing, appointing or setting apart to an holy use, a dedicating or devoting; also immortalizing or giving everlasting continuance to one's memory, F. of L.

CONSECRATION of Emperors, took its original from the Deification of Romulus, which Herodian describes as follows.

The Emperors, who leave either sons or designed successors at their death, are consecrated after this manner, and are said to be enroll'd among the number of the gods. On this occasion the whole city maintains a publick grief mixed as it were with the solemnity of a festival. The true body is buried in a very sumptuous funeral according to the ordinary method. But they take care to have an image of the emperor made in wax done to the life, and this they expose to publick view, just at the entrance of the palace gate, on a stately bed of ivory, covered with rich garments of embroidered work and cloth of gold. The image lies there all pale, as if under a dangerous indisposition, the whole senate dress'd in black sit the greatest part of the day round the bed on the left hand, and the aged matrons, matrons, who either on account of their parents or husbands are reputed noble, on the right hand. They wear no jewels, or gold, or other ornaments; but are attired in close white vests. This ceremony continues seven days together, the Physicians being admitted every day to the bed-side, and declaring the patient continually to grow worse and worse. At last, when they suppose him to be dead, a select company of young gentlemen of the senatorian order take up the bed upon their shoulders, and carry it through the via sacra, or the holy way, into the old Forum, the place where the Roman magistrates are us'd to lay down their offices. On both sides there are raised galleries, with seats one above another, one side being fill'd with boys nobly descended, and of the most eminent patrician families; the other with a like set of ladies of quality; who both together sing hymns and Pæans compos'd in very mournful and passionate airs, to the praise of the deceased. When these are over, they take up the bed again and carry it into the Campus Martius, where in the widest part of the field is erected a four-square pile, intirely compos'd of large planks in shape of a pavilion, and exactly regular and equal in dimensions. This in the inside is filled with dry chips, but without is adorned with coverlids of cloth of gold, and beautified with pictures and curious figures in ivory. Above this is placed another frame of wood, less, but set off with the like ornaments with little portico's. Over this is placed a third and fourth pile, each less than that whereon it stands; and so others perhaps till they come to the least of all, which forms the top. The figure of the structure taken all together may be compar'd to those watch-towers, which are to be seen in harbours of note, and by the fire on their top direct the course of ships into the haven. After this, hoisting up the body into the second frame of building, they get together a vast quantity of all manner of sweet odours and perfumes, whether of fruits, herbs or gums, and pour them in heaps all about it: there being no nation, city, or indeed any eminent men, who do not rival one another in paying these last presents to their prince. When the place is quite filled with a huge pile of spices and drugs, the whole order of knights ride in a solemn procession round the structure, and imitate the motions of the Pyrrhic dance. Chariots too in a very regular and decent manner are drove round the pile, the drivers being clothed in purple, and bearing the images of all the illustrious Romans renowned either for their councils, or administration at home, or their memorable achievements in war. The pomp being finished, the successor takes a torch in his hand and puts it to the frame, and at the same time the whole company assist in lighting it in several places; when on a sudden the chips and drugs catching fire, the whole pile is quickly consumed. At last from the highest and smallest frame of wood an eagle is let loose, which, ascending with the flames towards the sky, is supposed to carry the prince's soul to heaven.

The COPEs of Heaven, the arch or concavity of heaven.

COPE'RNICAN System [so called of Nicholas Copernicus the inventor or rather reviver of it] is a system of the world, wherein the sun is supposed at rest, and the planets with the earth to describe ellipses round him. The heavens and stars are here supposed at rest; and that diurnal motion they seem to us to have from east to west is reputed to be the earth's motion from west to east. It is described thus,

The sun being found to be a body more than 300 times bigger than our earth, it seemed preposterous that so mighty a body of fire, should whirl round so large a circle as his sphere, according to the Ptolemaick system, in so short a time as 24 hours (when according to its computed distance, he must move 7570 miles in a minute.) It was therefore more reasonable to believe that the earth was seated in the sphere, that Ptolemy had placed the sun in, and that the sun was placed in the center; for by that means, if the earth but turn round upon its own axis in 24 hours, every side of it is turned to the sun, and consequently a day and a night is afforded to all its inhabitants, without the necessity of the sun's or earth's making so vast a journey as the circle of its sphere requires. He therefore placed the sun in the centre, with no other motion than turning round upon its own axis, which it performs in 27 days and a half. He also supposes the sun to be surrounded with a vast space of Æther of many millions of miles miles extent, which is called its vortex, which Æther is carried round with the sun; and because the planets float in it, they also are carried in a continual circuit from west to east round the sun in certain periodical times, according to their nearness or distance from the sun. The earth is one of these planets, and has another attending her, viz. the moon; for that planet belongs to us only, being in a continual circuit round this earth, and with it carried on in the annual circuit that the earth makes round the sun. The use of it being to reflect the sun-beams to us at such times as he is gone from us. The other planets have the like concomitants. Jupiter has four, and Saturn five, as is supposed for the same reason; and because those planets are so much farther distant from the sun than we are, they have, of consequence, occasion for more moons than we have. It is certain, by ocular demonstration, that there are four little planets called Satellites, which are in continual circuit round about Jupiter, that are so regular in their motions, that the eclipses of them are calculated, and thereby a great help found out to the correcting of the maps. See the above scheme.

CRUCIA'TA Glabra, [Bot.] smooth Cross-wort, L.

CRUCIA'TA Hirsuta, rough or hairy Cross-wort, L.

To CRUCIATE [cruciatum, L.] to torment.

CRUCIA'TUS [with Anatomists] a muscle of the thigh lying under the vasti, L.

CRUCIBLE, a vessel made of earth, and so tempered and baked as to endure the greatest fire for melting oars, metals, minerals, &c.

CRUCIBLE [in Chymistry] is express'd by these characters.

CRUCIFEROUS [crucifer, L.] bearing a cross, L.

CRUCIFERS, the same as Crutched Friers.

CRUCIFIX [q. cruci affixus, i. e. affixed to the cross] a figure representing our Saviour on the cross.

CRUCIFI'XION, the act or suffering of crucifying or being crucified.

To CRUCIFY [crucifigere, L. crucifer, F.] to fasten, bind or nail to a cross; also to mortify lusts, &c.

CRUCIGEROUS [cruciger, L.] bearing a cross.

CRUDE [crudus, L.] raw, indigested, that has not had the degree of coction, i. e. heat requisite to prepare it for eating or for some other purpose.

CRUDE Humours [in Physick] are such humours as want that preparation and elaboration which they ordinarily receive from digestion.

CRUDE'LITY [crudelitas, L.] cruelty.

CRU'DENESS { [crudité, F. cruditas, L.] rawness.

CRU'DITY

CRUDITY [with Physicians] is when the blood is not duly fermented, and brought to a right consistence; or it may be defined to be that estate of a disease, in which the morbid matter is of such bulk, figure, cohesion, mobility or inactivity, which create or increase the disease.

CRUDITY [in the Stomach] is an ill digestion, when the aliment or meat is not duly fermented, and regularly turned into chyle.

CRU'EL [crudelis, L.] fierce, hard-hearted, barbarous; grievous, hard, painful, F.

CRU'ELNESS { [crudelitas, L. cruauté, F.] barbarous-

CRU'ELTY { ness, fierceness, hard-heartedness, ill usage, rigour, unmerciful temper.

CRUENTA'TED [cruentatus, L.] embued, or besprinkled, or bedawbed with blood.

CRU'PPER Buckles, large square buckles fitted to the saddle tree behind to fasten the crupper.

CRU'RA [with Anatomists] the two heads or beginnings of the marrowy substance of the brain, L.

CRU'RA Medulle oblongatæ [with Anatomists] the internal substance of the two sides of the cerebrum, gathered together as it were into two bundles, L.

CRU'RA Clitoridis [in Anatomy] a membranous partition that runs down between the Corpora nervosa of it, from the glands to its divarication at the Os pubis, dividing the Clitoris into two parts.

CRU'RAL [cruralis, L.] of or pertaining to the leg.

CRU'RAL Artery [with Anatomists] is a continuation of the Iliac Artery, which passes out of the lower belly, and enters into the thighs, where it loses its former name, and is called Cruralis.

CRU'RAL Vein [in Anatomy] a vein whose trunk receives the greater and smaller Iliaca, the Muscula, the Poplitea and the Saphena, and goes up to the groin and ends in the Iliaca.

CRURÆUS [in Anatomy] a muscle of the leg, situate on the bone of the thigh, is continued from between the greater and less Trochanter forwards to its lowest part, and is inserted to a prominence at the upper and fore-part of the bone Tibia, L.

CRUS, or magnus pes [in Anatomy] all that part of the body reaching from the buttocks to the toes, which is divided into the thigh, leg and foot, L.

CRUSE [cruche, F. krus, Du.] a phial for oil or vinegar.

To CRUSH [probably of cruciare, L. or escraser, F.] to break, to squeeze; to oppress, to ruin.

CRUST [crusta, L.] the outward part of bread or shelly part of any thing.

CRUST CLUNG [in Husbandry] spoken of ground, that is causted over and sticks so hard together that nothing will grow on it, called also soil-bound.

CRU'STA Lattea [in Surgery] a scurf or crusty scab that spreads over the head, face and other parts of an infant at the time of its first sucking, L.

CRUSTA'CEOUS Shell fishes, are fishes covered with shells, which are made up of several pieces and joints, such as lobsters, crabs, cray-fish, &c.

CRUSTACEOUS Shells, are generally softer than testaceous ones, which are intirely of one piece, and are much harder, thicker and stronger than crustaceous ones, as scallops, oysters, cockles, &c.

CRUSTA'CEOUSNESS [crusta, L. a shell, crouteux, F.] hardness, like, or being covered with a shell, as shell-fish.

CRUSTI'FICK [crustificus, L.] that bringeth a crust or skin.

CRU'STINESS [of crouteux, F. crustosus, L.] hardness of bread; also pettishness of temper.

CRU'STULA [with Surgeons] a small scab or scar of a sore; also a blood-shot in the eye occasioned by a blow, wound, &c. being a falling of blood into the Tunica conjunctiva.

CRU'TCHED Friars [freres croisez, F.] friars who wear the sign of the cross on their garments.

CRU'TCHES [probably of krucke, Teut. cjicce, Sax.] wooden supporters for lame persons.

CRUSA'DO (a Portuguese coin in value four shillings CRUZAT'S) sterling.

CRUZADO, a croisade, an expedition to the holy land.

To CRY [crier, F.] to weep; also to make proclamation.

CRIMO'DES [with Physicians] a cold shivering fever, but frequently accompanied with an inflammation of the inner parts.

CRYP O'RCHIS [of κρυπτω to hide, and ὄρχις the testicle] a disease when the testicles are hid in the belly.

CRY'PTÆ, grotto's, caves or hollow places underground; vaults set apart for the burial of particular families: the graves of the martyrs were more especially called cryptæ, where the primitive Christians used to meet for the performing divine service; also a church underground like that of St. Faith's under St. Paul's.

CRY'PTICAL ? [crypticus, L. of κρυπτικός, Gr.] hidden,

CRY'PTICK } secret, hid underground.

CRYPTO'GRAPHY [of κρυπτός secret, and γραφω to write] the art of secret writing, as by characters or cyphers.

CRYPTO'LOGY [of κρυπτός and λόγος, Gr.] a speaking or discoursing in secret; a whispering privately.

CRYPTOPO'RTICUS [of κρυπτω, Gr. to hide, and porticus, L. porch, &c.] a secret walk or vault underground or in some low place; a gallery closed on all parts to be cool in summer; a grot, a cloister, L.

CRY'STAL [κρυστάλλος, Gr.] a very bright and transparent stone that looks like ice, or the clearest sort of glass.

CRYSTAL [with Chymists] that part of a lixivium or lie, that is made of any metal or mineral, which remains congealed after some part of the moisture is evaporated.

CRY'STAL [in Chymical Writings] is expressed by this character, Ψ .

CRYSTAL mineral, is salt petre prepared with sulphur, the salt petre being put in a crucible and set in a furnace, and when it is in fusion a small quantity of flower of sulphur is added at several times, the quantity of two drams of sulphur to eight ounces of salt petre.

CRYSTALLINE or icy humour [with Oculists] a white shining humour of the eye, which is thicker than the rest, and is the first instrument of sight.

CRYSTALLINE [κρυστάλλινος, Gr.] of, like or pertaining to crystal.

CRYSTALLINE Heavens [in Astronomy] two spheres supposed by the ancient Astronomers, who followed the Ptolemaick system, one of which served them to explain the flow motion of the fixed stars, causing them (as they imagined) to move one degree eastwards in 70 years; and the other helped to solve a motion, which they termed the motion of trepidation or libration, by which they supposed the sphere to swag from pole to pole.

CRYSTALLOIDES [with Oculists] the crystalline coat of the eye.

CRYSTA'LLOMANCY [of κρυστάλλος and μαντεία, Gr.] a sort of divination or foretelling future events by means of a mirror or looking glass.

CRY'STALS of Copper [with Chymists] is a solution of copper in spirit of nitre, evaporated and crystallized to gain the salt; those crystals are used as causticks, but will dissolve if exposed to the air.

CRY'STALS of Venus [with Chymists] common verdgrease dissolved in distilled vinegar, and set in a cool place to crystallize.

CRY'STALS of Allum, is allum purified and reduced into crystals in the same manner as tartar; the crystals are quadrangular and brilliant like diamonds.

CRYSTALS of Tartar, is tartar purified and dissolved, and again coagulated in form of crystals. To do this, they boil the tartar in water, skim it and strain it, and when it is cool, little white, shining crystals are formed at the edges, and also a pellicle or cream swimming at the top.

CRYSTALS of Tartar chalybeated, is when the tartar is impregnated with the most dissoluble parts of iron.

CRYSTALS of Tartar emetick is when it is charged with the sulphureous parts of antimony to make it vomitive.

CRYSTALS of Mars, is iron reduced into salts by an acid liquor.

CRYSTALLIZA'TION [with Chymists] an operation, whereby the salts of metals or other mix'd bodies, dissolv'd in any liquor, and made to shoot into pretty little figured lumps or pieces, called crystals from their being transparent and clear like crystals.

To CRYSTALLIZE [crystalliser, F.] to reduce to or to grow into such crystals.

CRYSTA'LLI [in Medicine] pustles dispersed all over the body, white and of the bigness of a lupine.

CUB [according to Minshaw comes from cubare, L. to lie down] a bear's whelp; also a fox or martens of the first year.

CUBA'TION, a lying down, a resting or reposing, L.

CUBATORY [cubatorium, L.] a dormiter or dormitory.

CUBATURE [with Geometricians] is the finding exactly the solid content of any body proposed in solid inches, feet, yards, &c.

CUBE, is a figure comprehended under six equal sides, each being a geometrical square, the same as a die, as in the figure.

Cu'BBRIDGE Head [in a Ship] a partition made of boards, &c. across the fore-castle and half deck of the ship, the one being called the cubbridge-head before, and the other the cubbridge-head behind.

CUBE [with Algebraists] the third power in a series or rank of geometrical proportionals continued, as a is the root, aa the square, aaa the cube.

CUBE [with Arithmeticians] the cubick number, a number which arises from the multiplication of any number, first by itself, and then by the product; so 125 is a cubick number produced by 5, first multiplied by 5, and then by 5 the product.

CUBE Root [in Geometry] is the side of a cube number; so 3 is the root or side of the cube 27, and 5 is the side or root of 125.

CUBE Square [in Geometry] is the biquadrate or 4th power, which is produced by the root or side being thrice multiplied into it self; thus taking 3 for the side, 9 is the square, 27 the cube-square or biquadrate.

Cu'BEES, are an aromatick fruit, brought from the West Indies.

Cu'BIC } [κυβικός, Gr.] of or pertaining to or having the figure of a cube.

Cu'BICAL Artery [with Anatomists] a branch of the axillary artery.

CUBICAL Foot, a measure of solid bodies which are a foot every way.

CUBIC Equations [with Algebraists] are such where the highest power of the unknown body is a cube.

CUBICAL Parabolas, a parabola of the higher kind, as $a^2 x = y$; &c.

Cu'BICALNESS [of cubique, F. cubicus, L.] like a cube.

CuBi'CLAR [cubicularis, L.] of or pertaining to a bed-chamber.

Cu'BIFORM [cubiformis, L.] of the form or shape of a cube.

CUBED CUBE [with Mathematicians] is the 6th power of any number or quantity, so 729 is a cubed cube raised from the root 3 times 5 multiplied into it self.

Cu'BIT [cubitus, L.] the length of the arm from the elbow to the middle finger; or, according to others, the middle part between the shoulders and the wrist.

CUBIT [among the Ancients] was of 3 kinds, viz. the great cubit, which was 9 foot long; the middle cubit 2 foot long; the little cubit a foot and half long.

The CUBIT [with Anatomists] is a long hard bone, having a hollow in the middle which lies in the inside of the arm, and reaches from the elbow to the wrist; others make it consist of two bones, the one called ulna or radius.

CUBITÆ'US externus [in Anatomy] a muscle arising from the outward knob of the os humeri, and is inserted to the upper and outward part of the os metacarpi of the little finger; its use is to extend the wrist.

CUBITÆUS internus [in Anatomy] a muscle springing from the inward knob of the shoulder-bone, whence it passes along the ulna and comes to its implantation in the fourth bone of the carpus, and the os metacarpi of the little finger. It helps to bend the wrist.

Cu'BED CUBE } [with Mathematicians] the 6th power of any number or quantity; thus 64 is a cubed cube, raised from the root 2, multiplied 5 times into it self.

Cu'BUS CUBI, the 9th power, or a number multiplied 8 times into it self.

CuBOi'DES [with Anatomists] the 7th bone of the tarsus of the foot; which is joined behind to the os calcis; before, to the outer bones of the metatarsus; and on the inside, to the os cuneiforme.

CuCHE'RUS [Old Law Records] a coucher, setter or setting dog.

Cu'CKING Stool [probably q. d. a choaking-stool; because scolds being thus punished are almost choaked; the Saxons called it Yceal King's Stole, Sax. and Dr. T. H. derives it from coquine, F. a beggar-woman, because sturdy beggar-women were duck'd in it] a sort of chair hung on a post or tree over a water, it was let down and drawn up by a rope and pulley, a punishment formerly inflicted on scolding women, and bakers and brewers who transgress'd the law, who being fastened in this chair are duck'd or immersed in stercore, i. e. in some muddy or stinking pond.

Cu'CKOLD [cocu, F.] one whose wife's lewd pranks are vulgarly said to graft horns on his head.

Cu'CKOO } [gacc, Sax. cog, C. Br. concou, F. cuculus, L. probably of κόνκος, Gr.] a bird well known.

Cu'CKOO Pintle, an herb.

Cu'CKOO Flower, the plant Ladies-smock.

CUCK-QUEAN, a wench or whore.

CUCU'LLATE Flower [with Botanists] one that resembles the figure of an helmet or monk's-hood, and is also called a Galeate or Galericulate flower.

CUCULA'RIS, also called Trapezius [with Anatomists] is a muscle of the shoulder-blade or scapula, which arises from the os capitis, the ligamentum colli, and the top of the spine of the last vertebra of the neck; and also from the eight upper ones of the chest, and is inserted to the clavicula and the spina scapulae; it is called cucullaris of cuculla a monk's-hood or cowl, because this together with its fellow bears a resemblance to it, covering the back, L.

CUCU'LLATED [cucullatus, L.] hooded.

Cu'CULUS [with Botanists] the herb Night-shade, L.

Cu'CUMER } [cucumer, L.] a well known fruit.

Cu'CUMBER }

CUCU'PHA [with Anatomists] a cover for the head made of sweet-scented cephalick spices reduced to powder and sewed between two pieces of silk or quilted in a cap, good against diseases of the head.

CUCU'RBITA, a gourd, L.

CUCU'RBITA } a cupping-glass or hollow vessel made of tin, &c. used commonly in baigno's, they apply it to the body either with or without scarification, to divert or drive the blood into some other part; or if it be corrupt, to evacuate it or let it out.

CUCURBI'TULA }

CUCURBITA caeca } a cupping vessel used without scarification, and is commonly applied or set on to the most fleshy parts, where there is no danger of hurting the large vessels and nerves, L.

CUCU'RBIT [in Chymical Writings] is expressed by these characters.

CUCURBITE [with Chymists] a vessel of glass, &c. for distillations and rectifications, usually by them called a body, in this form.

CUCURBITA'CEOUS Plants, such as resemble a gourd.

CUCURBITINE [cucurbitinus, L.] of or like gourds.

CUCURBITINI lumbrici, certain broad worms resembling gourd seeds in shape, which breed in the entrails of human kind.

CUCUY'OS, a fly in America, which shines in the night so brightly that travellers are said to be able to travel, read or write by its light.

CUD [cud, Sax.] the inner part of the throat of beasts, or the food which is there repositied after grazing, and chew'd over again by cows, &c.

CUD-WEED } [with Botanists] a plant whose leaves are made use of instead of cotton, and thence it is called cotton-weed.

CUD lost, a distemper or infirmity in both great and small cattle.

To chew the CUD [ceopan and cud, Sax.] to chew again as a cow does; also to muse upon, to think upon or reflect.

Cu'DDEN } a changeling, a nizey, or silly fellow.

Cu'DDY }

CUDDY [in a Ship of war of the first rate] a place which lies between the captain's and lieutenants cabins under the poop, which is divided into partitions for the master's and secretary's office.

CUDE-CLOTH, a face-cloth for a young child, which in ancient times was used at baptism, and was the priest's fee.

Cu'DGEL [probably of cudse, Du. a knotted stick] a stick to fight with.

To Cu'DGEL, to beat or bang with a stick.

CUE, an item given to actors on the stage, what or when they are to speak; also a mood or humour, as in a merry cue.

CUE'RPO, as to walk in Cuerdo, is to go without a cloak, and all the formalities of a complete dress.

CUI ante divorcium [i. e. to whom before divorce] a writ empowering a divorced woman to recover her lands from him to whom they were alienated by her husband during marriage; because she could not gain say it, L.

CY'BELE [according to the Pagan Theology] was the wife of Saturn. She was also called Dyndimene, Berecynthia and the grand-mother; not only because she was the mother of the gods, but because she was the goddess of the earth. And for that reason the Latins called her Ops, and the Greeks Rhea, she was also called Vesta. She is sometimes taken for fire, and sometimes for the earth.

She was also called Syria Dea, because she was born in Syria.

She was represented with towers on her head, sitting in a chariot drawn by lions, and a great number of trees and animals round about her. Her solemn festivals were called Megalefia, and were held every fourth month. Her priests were called Gallantes or Galli, and the chief of 'em Archigallus, because they were chosen out of Gallo Græcia, a province of Asia Minor, joining to Phrygia; they were also called Corybantes, and in their celebration of her rites acted the part of madmen with their drums, trumpets, and such other instruments, singings, howlings, cutting themselves desperately, and all that they met.

Those Gauls that had planted themselves in Phrygia, in these Megalefia raised themselves to such a pitch of fury by the forementioned instruments, &c. that they became really mad, and in wantonness often wounded one another with swords and other weapons, and at the conclusion washed their bodies and wounds in some river dedicated to this goddess.

Cybele was the daughter of Menoe, a king of Phrygia, and upon some distaste that her father had taken against her mother, was thrown into a wood to be devoured by the wild beasts. But being happily found by a shepherd, he brought her home, and bred her up as his own.

She was extraordinary beautiful, and as she grew to years of understanding, became very famous for her skill in musick, and curing the diseases of infants; so that the king acknowledged her for his daughter, and granted her a train according to her quality.

She afterwards fell in love with a young man named Atys; but he not obtaining liberty to marry her, she was got with child by him, for which Atys was condemned to die, which caused her to run mad for grief, and leaving her father's court, she ran up and down the country with a pipe and drum in her hand.

After her death the Phrygians being afflicted with scarcity of corn and divers diseases, upon consulting the oracle, they were advised to worship Cybele as a goddess, in order to get themselves extricated out of those calamities.

The Romans had no great knowledge of this goddess till Hannibal with his army was in the bowels of Italy, and the senate of Rome being terrified with several prodigious accidents that happened at that time, they sent to consult the books of the Sybils, and being informed that the Carthaginians might be expelled Italy, if the Mater Idea came to Rome, they sent ambassadors to Attalus king of Phrygia, to entreat him to send them the stone statue of this goddess, which was in the town Pessinunte. It being brought to Rome, all the dames in the city went out to meet and welcome it as far as the mouth of the river Tiber: and the next year they erected a temple for her.

The pine-tree and the box were consecrated to this goddess.

DÆDALUS [δαίδαλος, i. e. artificial, of τῷ διδάλλων to do artificially, or of δαίω to know] an Athenian artificer, the son of Micion, said to have lived A. M. 2874, about the time that Gideon judged Israel. To him is attributed the invention of the saw and ax, the plummet, augre, glue, and cement; and he is said to have made statues with machinery that the eyes would move as tho' living. Being accused for the death of Perdix, his nephew, he fled into Crete, and there made a labyrinth for Minos, into which Minos put him and his son Icarus, as the Poets say, for making a cow of wood, into which Pasiphae being put, was lain with by a bull; see Pasiphae. The grounds of which fable is, Dæ- dalus was privy to the adultery of Pasiphae the wife of Minos with his servant Taurus. They tell us likewise, that being prisoner in the labyrinth, he desired to have feathers and wax, in order to make a curious present for the king;
but with them made wings for himself and his son Icarus, and flew away out of prison, and got away by ship from Crete to Sardinia, and from thence to Cuma, where he built a temple for Apollo; but his son Icarus soared so high, that the beams of the sun melted the wax, and so he fell into the Icarian Sea. The moral of which is, that he escaped with some discontented persons from Crete in ships, and Minos pursuing them hard, Icarus's ship was split upon a rock, but Dædalus overailed the king, and arrived safe in Sicily, sailing swifter because he had then invented sail-cloths, whereas none before him knew any speedier way of sailing than by the help of oars.

The Poets tell us, that Dædalus made walking statues; but the truth of the fable is, the carvers and statuaries of that time made their statues with their feet in a standing posture; but Dædalus made his statues with one of the feet extended and before the other, as in a walking posture.

DA'MPNESS }

DAMP [damp, Dan] moiſture, wetneſs; alſo a vapour that frequently ariſes in mines under ground, and ſometimes choaks the workmen, unleſs they get away quickly.

To DAMP [damp, Dan.] to make damp or moiſt; alſo to put a damp upon or diſhearten, alſo to allay, to chill.

DAMPS [in Mines] are noxious exhalations, which ſometimes ſuffocate thoſe that work in them, and are otherwiſe prejudicial, they are diſtinguiſhed into 4 ſorts.

1. The Peas-Bloom DAMP [at the mines at the Peak in Derbyſhire] this damp is ſuppoſed to proceed from the multitude of the red trefoil flowers, called hony-fuckles, with which the lime-ſtone meadows there do abound. It takes its name from the likeneſs to the ſmell of peas-bloſſoms. It is ſaid always to come in the ſummer-time, but is not mortal.

2. The fulminating DAMPS, theſe are found frequently in coal-mines, but very ſeldom, if at all, in lead-mines. If the vapour of theſe ſort of damps is touched by the flame of a candle, it immediately catches fire, and has all the effects of lightening or fired gun-powder.

3. The Common DAMPS, affect persons with shortness of breath and difficulty of breathing; but are seldom injurious any farther, if the persons affected with it do not swoon, which if they do, though they are not quite suffocated, are yet tormented with very violent convulsions on their recovery. The coming of these sort of damps are known by the flame of the candles becoming round, and growing lesser and lesser till it go quite out. The method of curing those that swoon, is by laying them on their bellies with their mouth to a hole dug in the ground, and if that does not recover them, they fill them full of ale, and if that fails, they look upon their case desperate.

4. The Globe DAMP, this by miners is supposed to gather from the stream of their bodies and the candles, which ascending up into the highest part of the vault, does there condense, and in time a film grows over it, which corrupts and becomes pestilential. It appears of a round form about the bigness of a foot-ball, hanging in the highest part of the roof, of such passages of the mine, as branch out from the main grove. It is covered with a skin about the thickness of a cobweb. If this skin be broken by a splinter or any other accident, the damp presently flies out and suffocates all that are near it, the workmen have a way of breaking it at a distance by the help of a stick and a long rope, which being done, they afterwards purify the place with fire.

DIEZEUGMENON Note [Musick] the note called E-la-mi.

DIEZEUGMENON Paranele [in Musick] the note called d'la-sol-re.

DIFFAMABLE [diffamabilis, L.] that is capable or may be defamed or slandered.

DIFFAMATION, a taking away a person's good name.

DIFFAMATORY, slanderous.

To DIFFAME [diffamare, L.] to slander, to scandalize.

DIFFARREATION, the parting of a cake; a solemnity used among the ancient Romans, at the divorcement of a man and his wife, L.

To DIFFER [differre, L.] to vary, to be unlike, to disagree.

DIFFERENCE [differentia, L.] a diversity, a variation; also a controversy, variance, a quarrel, F.

DIFFERENCE [with Logicians] is an essential attribute, which belongs to any species, which is not found in the Genus, and is the universal idea of that species. As for example, body and spirit, or soul in human nature, are two species of substance, which in their ideas do contain something more than is in that substance; for in a body is found impenetrability and extension, in a soul or spirit the power of cogitation, of thinking and reasoning; and thence the difference of a body is impenetrable extension, and the difference of a spirit is cogitation.

DIFFERENCE [with Mathematicians] is the remainder, when one number or quantity has been subtracted from another.

DIFFERENCE of Longitude of two places on the Earth [Geography] is an arch of the equator, comprehended between the meridians of those places.

DIFFERENCE of the Sun, &c. [Astronomy] is the difference between the right and oblique ascension of the sun or planet.

DIFFERENCES [in Heraldry] are certain addiments to coats of armour, whereby something is added or altered to distinguish the younger families from the elder; or to shew how far they remove from the principal house. These differences are 9, viz. the Label, the Crescent, the Mullet, the Martlet, the Annulet, the Flower-de-lis, the Rose, the Eight-foil, and the Cross-moline; all which see in their places.

Ancient DIFFERENCES [in Coat Armour] were borders of all kinds.

Modern DIFFERENCES [in Coat Armour] are the crescent, file or label, mullet, martlet, &c.

To DIFFERENCE [differencier, F.] to make a difference between, to distinguish.

DIFFERENTIAL, of any quantity, is the fluxion of that quantity.

DIFFERENTIAL Quantity [in the higher Geometry] an infinitely small quantity, or particle of a quantity so small as to be incommensurable thereto, or less than any assignable one.

DIFFERENTIAL calculus [Geo.] a method of differencing quantities, that is, of finding a differential or that infinitely small quantity, which taken an infinite number of times is equal to a given quantity.

DIFFERENTIAL [in the doctrine of Logarithms] the doctrine of tangents.

DIFFERENTIAL-DIFFERENTIAL calculus, is a method of differencing differential quantities, as the sign of a differential is the letter d, that of a differential of dx, is d dx, and the differential of d dx, d d dx, or d² dx, &c.

A DIFFERENTIAL [of the first power or degree] is that of an ordinary quantity, as dx.

A DIFFERENTIAL [of the second power] is an infinitesimal of a differential quantity of the first degree, as d dx or dx dx, or dx², &c.

A DIFFERENTIAL [of the third power, &c.] is an infinitesimal of a differential quantity of the second power, as d d dx, or dx³, &c.

DIFFER

DIFFERENTNESS [of differentia, L.] difference.
DIFFICULT [difficile, Fr. of difficilis, L.] uneasy, troublesome, crabbed, hard to be performed, understood or pleased.

DIFFLATION [in Chymistry] is when spirits raised by heat are blown by a sort of bellows in the opposite Camera or arch of the furnace, and there found congealed.

DIFFLUENCE ? [diffluentia, L.] a flowing abroad; or DIFFLUENCY } divers ways.

DIFFLUENT [diffluens, L.] loose and ready to fall asunder.

DIFFLUOUS [diffuus, L.] flowing forth, abroad or several ways.

DIFFLUVIUM, a falling off, a flowing down, L.

DIFFLUVIUM [in Botany] a distemper in trees whereby they loose their bark, L.

DIFFORM [difformis, L.] a word used in opposition to uniform, and signifies that there is no manner of regularity in the form or appearance of a thing.

DIFFORM Flowers [with Florists] such flowers as are not of the same figure all round, or have their fore and back parts, as also their right and left parts unlike.

DIFFUGOUS [diffugus, L.] that flieth divers ways.

To DIFFUND [diffundere, L.] to pour out, to scatter abroad; also to diffuse or spread abroad.

DIFFUSEDNESS [of diffusus, L.] the being poured forth.

DIFFUSILE [diffusilis, L.] spreading.

To DIFFUSE [diffusum, L.] to spread here and there.

DIFFUSE [diffusus, L.] diffusive.

DIFFUSION, a pouring out; a spreading abroad, L.

DIFFUSION [with Philosophers] is the dispersing the subtle effluvia's of bodies into a kind of atmosphere quite round them; as for example, the magnetical particles are diffused every where round about the earth in parts adjacent to it. And the light is diffused by the rays of the sun, issuing all round from that wonderful body of fire.

DIFFUSIVE [diffusus, L.] apt to spread or extend.

DIFFUSIVENESS, extensiveness, aptness to spread here and there.

To DIG [prob. of dician, Sax.] to make a trench about to break or open the ground with a spade, pick-ax, &c.

To DIG a Badger [with Hunters] to raise or discharge him.

DRU'IDS [Drhuiden, Brit. i. e. very wise men, or of Δρυιδες, of δρως, Gr. an oak] certain Magi, or priests in France, that built in the city of Orleans a college in the year 1140. These were of old one of the two estates of France, to whom was committed the care of providing sacrifices, of prescribing laws for their worship, of the deciding the controversies amongst the people, concerning the bounds of their grounds, and such like.

They had also the tutoring of young children, who commonly remained under their tuition for 20 years. They taught them many verses which they caused them to learn by heart, without the assistance of any writing; and those who had not been instructed by these Druids, were not esteem'd sufficiently qualify'd to manage the affairs of state. At the end of the year, their custom was to go with great reverence, and gather branches and leaves of oak and mistletoe, to make a present to Jupiter, inviting all people to this ceremony by these words, which they caused to be proclaimed, Come to the oak branches the new year.

They had oaks in great estimation, and all that grew on them, especially Mistletoe, which they worshipped as a thing sent unto them from heaven. The manner of their sacrifices is related as follows. They caused meat to be prepared under an oak where Mistletoe grew, and two white bulls to be brought out, having their horns bound, i. e. first set to the plough; then the priest arrayed in white, climbed up a tree, and having a bill of gold in his hand, threshed off the Mistletoe, then offered the sacrifice, praying that the gift might be prosperous to the receivers; supposing the beast that was barren, if it drank of the Mistletoe, would be very fruitful, and that it was a remedy against all poison.

In their general assemblies they are said to have practised that which Pliny relates of the Storks, which usually tear in pieces the last that comes to their meeting, to oblige the rest to be more diligent. They are reported to have have been very cruel, and ordinarily murdered men upon the altars of their gods; and also in their schools, for it is related of one of their doctors named Herophilus, that he taught anatomy over the bodies of living men at times, to the number of 700.

It is supposed the French borrowed this superstition from Britain; and Tacitus says, that they were first in Britain.
